THE SOLDIER ELEMENT

Manifestly the Time of the Soldier is not Past.

The Sentiment from which the Pittsburg Convention Sprang.

Where the Work of Reconciliation Should Begin.

Who Are the Reconciled and who the Unreconciled.

Grand Torchlight Procession and Brilliant Illumination.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 18.—The Convention had its inception in suggestions made at an accidental meeting of soldiers, at the time of the Philadelphia Convention that nominated President Grant. The men who then determined that the call should be issued never for one instant conceived of the grandness, the magnitude, and the power of the great assembly of brave and renowned veterans that has been drawn together by the unbroken, always lasting, bonds of old comradeship. At the time when it was decided to hold the Convention the din of loud boasts of an impending political revolution filled the land. It had been proclaimed that the time of the soldier had passed, the old regimental color was to be torn down, the battle-stained and torn flags were to be forever furled. Faith that men would continue to indorse with votes the principles for which they risked their lives, was the only ground of confidence that the soldiers stood fast by the old banner, and would respond to the call. That faith is justified. The time of the soldiers has not passed. Gen. Garfield struck a true and responsive chord when he said the time had come for the soldiers to advance to the front. It was this feeling that contributed most to the magnitude of the gathering. There has never been such a meeting of the men who conquered the rebellion since the armies were disbanded. There never can be such again. One by one the maimed veterans that came home with bodies almost as much torn with shot and shell as the regimental standards, are passing away. Those who, fortunately, returned unscarred by battle, die by hundreds with the years. These thoughts have found frequent expression and have intensified the emotions awakened by the mere renewal of old companionship. Cheers and shouts, however loud, did not give expression to the deepest social feelings of brave hearts. The result has been to harmonize and unify action. The soldiers' element of the land now goes into the political contest as armies go into a battle, a common impulse leading and a common purpose strong. Every soldier goes home to work heartily and enthusiastically for the Republican cause, with the conviction that it is founded in right and must prevail.

The Convention of Veterans had a short business meeting this morning, adopted a short series of resolutions and adjourned without date. The meeting was merely formal in its character, but the lower part of the hall was packed full, and half the seats on the first balcony were filled. The procession, which was formed and had begun to march when the Convention met, was sufficiently attractive to keep the great mass of the people out of doors. The meeting was scarcely less spirited than yesterday. The resolutions prepared by the Committee gave entire satisfaction to the Convention. There were some who would have been glad of an expression by the Convention on some points not mentioned, as, for instance, land bounties for soldiers, but to what was asserted in the resolutions there was no dissent. The protest against a transfer of the Government to the coalition recently opposed to the constitutional amendments, the reaffirmation of the soldiers' confidence in President Grant, and the expression of sympathy and support for Hartranft, and the name of Senator Wilson, were each enthusiastically received. Perhaps the sentiment, "We cherish no sentiments of revenge toward our fellow-citizens of the South," was the most heartily applauded of all. It was clear from the tone of the Convention from beginning to end, that so far as the soldier element of the North is concerned, there is complete reconciliation. Their dead comrades filled the "bloody chasm." Standing by the buried heaps of slain the veterans weep but do not hate.

A queer paper here, which runs a half-and-half ticket and is pretentiously virtuous, tried to scare the Convention into avoiding all mention of Hartranft's name, and was perfectly horrified that it should pass a resolution expressing confidence in his integrity. Sorehead papers in other parts of the country are trying to belittle the meeting and make it appear that it was run only in the interest of the election of Hartranft. The course of these opposition sheets made it impossible for the Convention not to give some expression toward him. Silence would have been the strongest kind of expression against him, but in fact, as has been evident all the time, Hartranft has most completely the confidence of his old companions in arms. Those who knew him best—as Gen. Griffin, of New-Hampshire, and Gen. Burnside, under whom he served—are his warmest champions. The Convention was called to aid the national canvass, and if by its timid action it had defeated Hartranft, it would have served its principal purpose but poorly. What it has done is both politic and honest.

Today has been given up by the whole of Western Pennsylvania to a grand ratification of Grant, Wilson and Hartranft. The Soldiers' Convention closed, yesterday, peaceably, but the veterans remained here today and united with the citizens in the great demonstration. It is estimated that 100,000 people have been in Pittsburg today from places outside its limits. The day was fine till 10 o'clock in the evening, when it began to rain.

In the morning the streets were thronged with people and the sidewalks almost impassable, while the daylight procession was formed and marching. In the procession was represented the various trades and manufactures of Pittsburg. There were a great number of Grant and Wilson and Hartranft Clubs, comprising many thousands of men, and carriages and teams of all description. The streets were beautifully decorated. Many of the displays by private parties would have been noticeable among the elaborate ornamentation of some of the famous carnival days of European cities. The procession was two hours and a half in passing. In the afternoon 5,000 or 6,000 people proceeded to Friendship Grove, where Gen. Noyes spoke for a short time, and was followed by Gen. Butler, who did not arrive in the city till afternoon.

A most brilliant display was made in the evening, when the streets were illuminated and the torchlight procession moved. This procession must have contained as many as 10,000 men bearing torches. It was an hour and twenty-five minutes passing in solid columns, and its movement was quickened by the rain, which began falling about an hour after the march commenced. Almost every house on the line of march was illuminated, and if no more Democrats can be found in Pittsburg than there were dark buildings to-night, it would not be worth while to count their votes at all in November. But to the credit of the city be it said, that the doors of its citizens, without regard to party, were thrown open to the soldiers, and doubtless many Democrats purchased and burned extra candles this evening.

Mr. Greeley is expected to-morrow, but he comes in a bad time, and will not get much of a reception. At midnight departures began for distant parts of the country, both East and West, and by to-morrow at noon the city will be left with only its usual population.

Proceedings of the Convention.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 18.—The Convention reassembled in the Opera-house and was called to order at 10½ o'clock. Rev. John Sands, of Pittsburg, made a fervent prayer for the welfare and prosperity of the country.

The Committee on Resolutions made the following report, which was unanimously approved by the Convention:

We, the soldiers and sailors who served in the Union Army and Navy during the late war, in mass convention, in Pittsburg, assembled for the purpose of expressing our firm convictions upon issues which are logical results of the war, do affirm

First—That it is a source of unmingled pleasure to meet again and, reviving the memories of our campaigns for union and liberty, thence to draw lessons for present duty and future guidance.

Second—We reaffirm our devotion to the union of the States. The arbitrament of war has decreed that we are one nation, with one flag, with liberty and equality before the law for all men, and that the national authority is essential to establish, protect and defend the liberty and the inalienable rights of the people.

Third—We enter our solemn protest against transferring the control of the army and navy, the Treasury and the entire Government, the enforcement of the Constitutional Amendments, with the execution of the laws themselves, to unselfish and corrupt coalition, composed chiefly of elements but recently in open hostility to them all.

Fourth—We cherish no spirit of revenge toward our fellow-citizens of the South. The magnanimity of our late Commander-in-Chief on the field of Appomattox was a sufficient pledge of the Union Army that the "bloody chasm" of the war was closed, and "with malice toward none, but with charity to all," we extend the right hand of fellowship to all those who accept in good faith the results of the war, and who will extend to every citizen, of whatever race or color, the rights which are solemnly guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof.

Fifth—Reposing implicit confidence in the patriotism and gratitude of the nation, we confide to it every interest of the Union soldier; and we here express our most cordial appreciation of the unparalleled generosity of the people, as expressed through Congress in the laws providing pensions and bounties, and we fully believe that any irregularities which may appear will be cheerfully and promptly corrected.

Sixth—We gladly and proudly reaffirm our enthusiastic confidence in the integrity, patriotism and ability of President Grant. We point to his messages for opinions and recommendations in harmony with the most advanced political sentiment; we point to the condition of the country in all its relations, foreign and domestic, for the proof that its laws are well administered and its honor maintained. We reioice to be associated with him the incorruptible and indefatigable patriot and representative of American institutions, Hon. Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts.

Seventh—We pledge our steady and earnest support to President Grant and Congress in reforming the civil service and establishing the highest standard of fidelity among all the servants of the Government.

Eighth—Although this Convention is purely national in its inception and purposes, we cannot refrain from expressing our sympathy and giving our cordial support to our gallant comrade leading the column in Pennsylvania, whose illustrious record as a brave and faithful soldier should endear him to every loyal heart.—GEN. J. C. ABBOTT, Chairman.

After the reading of the resolutions Gen. Logan said that a large number of letters and telegrams addressed to the Convention had been received, and unless objection was made they would be published in the regular report of the proceedings without being read before the Convention. No objections were made.

Gen. Burnside then moved that the thanks of the soldiers and sailors be tendered to the hospitable citizens of Pittsburg for the kindness shown to them while in the city, and after the passage of the resolution of thanks, Gen. Logan, of Illinois, spoke as follows:

Comrades, one word let me say before we part—one word before we return to our homes; there is no reconciliation required on our part; we are the friends and aiders of the prosperity and peace of this country, and we sustain the banner of our old comrades. When these men who drew their blades against this country become reconciled to that banner and to the authorities, then shall harmony and peace prevail. For our own part there is no need of reconciliation. Let us go home fully determined to win this great victory, and by it to place the heroes of the loyal people in control of our institutions. Let each one go home to his city, to his town, his hamlet, and insist on all his friends voting not only for Gen. Grant and Henry Wilson, but the whole ticket down to the lowest man. Try to have a Republican triumph; that is what we want, that is what we must have in order to secure peace, happiness and prosperity in this country.

After prayer the Convention adjourned sine die.

PORK-PACKERS' CONVENTION.

They Meet and Organize for Business—List of Committees.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Sept. 18.—The Pork-packers' Convention assembled in the Common Council Chamber at 10 o'clock, this morning, and was called to order by Geo. F. Davis, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements. Mayor Davis was introduced and delivered a speech of welcome. Mr. Geo. F. Davis followed in a speech, after which Geo. D. Cragin, of New-York, was chosen temporary Chairman, and E. W. Mullen, of Cincinnati, was chosen temporary Secretary. The following Committees were then chosen:

On Permanent Organization—Messrs. Geo. F. Davis, of Ohio; Geo. Higgins, of Illinois; Geo. Balwin, of Boston; Warren Mitchell of Kentucky; J. G. Harvey of Maryland.

On Credentials—Cyrus Dupee, of Massachusetts; B. S. Cunningham, of Ohio; Samuel Dally, of New-York; Joshua Stiles and J. M. Duncan, of Kentucky.

On Business—Chas. Culbertson, of Illinois; T. J. Martin, of Kentucky; J. F. Armor, of Wisconsin; W. H. Hamilton, of Missouri; Chas. Kahn, Jr., of Cincinnati; H. T. Sample, of Indiana; Geo. B. Smith, of Iowa; Geo. D. Cragin, of New-York.

The subject of the basis of representation was brought up, and, after considerable discussion, referred to the Committee on Business.

The Convention then adjourned until 2½ o'clock P. M.

The delegates visited the Chamber of Commerce at noon today. They will attend the Industrial Exposition this evening.

A TERRIBLE MYSTERY.

Two Men Found Dead Near a Maryland Country Road, Each Having a Pistol—Was it a Duel?

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 18.—Yesterday afternoon the bodies of two white men were found lying in a dense thicket alongside of the Washington Turnpike, about three miles from this city. One body was lying with the face down, and under it was found a small pistol; the other was lying on the back with a small pistol beside it. Both the bodies were in such an advanced stage of decomposition as to render the recognition of the features impossible. Nothing was found with the remains except two tickets for Pittsburg via the Northern Central Railroad. Both men were about six feet in height, and were well dressed in black coats, pants and vests, and gray-ribbed hats; one wore gaiters and the other slippers. The Coroner's Jury failed to discover anything relating to the deceased.

Convention of the Odd-Fellows' Grand Lodge.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 18.—The Grand Lodge of I. O. of O. F. assembled this morning. The report of the Committee on Mileage and Per Diem, fixing the pay of officers and representatives at $6 per day for seven days, and mileage at five cents per mile to and from the place of meeting, was concurred in. The special order of the day, the proposed amendments to the Consatution, was then taken up.

The amendment providing that a member of the Order suspended or expelled from a lodge or encampment in any jurisdiction or sovereignty shall not be admitted to membership in a lodge or encampment in another jurisdiction or sovereignty, without first obtaining the consent of the lodge or encampment from which he is suspended or expelled; provided, however, that the members suspended or dropped for nonpayment of dues only may be admitted to membership in another jurisdiction or sovereignty, upon such conditions and under such rules and regulations as this Grand Lodge may have prescribed, or may at any time adopt, was unanimously adopted.

The afternoon session was devoted to the consideration of the reports of a committee on the subject of the extent and character of the jurisdiction assumed by the State Grand Bodies over subordinates originally chartered by the Grand Lodge of the United States and afterwards transferred to an adjoining State.

The Grand Lodge Committee reported that the law on the subject seemed fixed by long usage of this body. They concurred in the views of the Grand Sire in his report, and the Committee asked to be discharged from further consideration of the subject. Various other reports were submitted, on which no final action was taken. At 3 o'clock the Lodge adjourned until to-morrow at 9 A. M.

DEFALCATION IN THE TREASURY

The Facts About the Case—James J. Johnson the Culprit—Johnson a Democrat, Appointed in 1866.

The rumors of a defalcation in the United States Treasury in this City, which prevailed yesterday, prove to be well founded. From the inquiries we have made we learn that James J. Johnson, the head of the stamp division—that in which stamps are sold—is the guilty party. He left the office about the middle of August on the usual annual leave of absence of two weeks. Though he failed to return at the end of the time, no suspicion was excited, until it was accidentally learned, a day or two later, that his family did not know where he had gone to, and had not heard from him since he left. An examination of his accounts was at once made, and although at first everything seemed to be correct, a closer investigation showed that there was undoubtedly a considerable defalcation, though even yet its precise amount has not been ascertained. It cannot exceed $185,000, and may be considerably less.

The way in which the fraud was accomplished and concealed is not fully known. He failed to enter upon his books a large amount of stamps received from Washington a few days before he left, and in the ordinary routine of the office this omission would not be detected until his monthly account was made up at the end of August. Even then the fraud might have been concealed somewhat longer, for he could have reported that he had on hand a larger amount of stamps than he actually had.

It is the misfortune of the Assistant Treasurer's office that owing to the immense volume of its business—some two thousand millions a year—it is absolutely impossible, with any reasonable force, to verify by actual count, except at long intervals, the gold, currency or other property reputed to be on hand. Even to count the packages is a long work, and when this is done it may turn out that the packages do not contain the amount represented. This weakness in the system has always been known, but it has proved impossible to remedy it. There may be a monthly or weekly examination and counting of every coin, bill or stamp if a sufficient force is provided, but in the course of the following month or week the crime may be committed. It is probable that Johnson's crime was committed in some such way.

As soon as Johnson's defalcation was suspected, the Secretary of the Treasury was advised, and a thorough examination of the entire office requested. This has been going on for a couple of weeks, but it is not yet completed, and the examiners here were unable to give the facts positively till a corresponding examination of the records at Washington had been made, and hence have been subject to some unjust criticism in the evening papers. The defalcation was kept secret in the hope that Johnson's whereabouts could be ascertained.

The Assistant Treasurer's office is one of the few Government offices where the system of appointment and removal for political reasons has never prevailed. In fact, the civil service system has existed there. Johnson's case is a striking proof of that. Though an active Democrat at Albany, the friend of Mr. Cassidy of the Argus, he was appointed to a subordinate position in 1866 by Mr. Van Dyck, a Republican, and has continued in the office under three successive Republican Assistant Treasurers, being gradually promoted till he was placed at the head of the stamp division about two years since. No one ventures to intimate that any blame is to be attached to Assistant Treasurer Hillhouse.

Resignation of the President of a German Greeley Club—He is Disgusted at the Coalition with Tammany.

Mr. Jacob C. Hoffman, late President of the German Liberal Republican organization of the Twelfth Assembly District, has resigned his position, and publishes the following letter, addressed to his former associates:

To the Members of the German Liberal Republican Greeley-Brown Campaign Club of the Twelfth Assembly District:

GENTLEMEN: The late actions of the Liberal Republican Party not being in harmony with my Republican principles, I hereby tender you my resignation as President of the German Liberal Republican Greeley-Brown Campaign Club of the Twelfth Assembly District, with the request that it be accepted, as I am unwilling to have any further connection with the Liberal Republican Party. At the same time, I deem it my duty to give the reasons which compel me to take this step. As you all are aware, I accepted the position as your presiding officer only after mature reflection, and under the firm belief that the Liberal Republican Party would sincerely labor for a reform in the administration of the National Government, and that the election of Greeley as President would be beneficial to the country.

Assurances were freely made that the campaign should be carried on on an honest Republican basis. How these assurances were kept can best be seen by the bargains made when Honesty and principle alike were sacrificed. Nominations were made and compromises entered into which every honest and fair-minded man must repel with contempt. It will be apparent to every intelligent citizen that this coalition is unable to carry out the many promised reforms in the administration of the National Government. The union of so-called Liberal Republicans for the purpose of satisfying the ambition of malcontents on the one side, and the placing in power the convicted Tammany Hall swindlers on the other, can certainly have no other excuse than the bargain and sale of the votes of the people. Yes, by the meanest of tricks, great magnanimity, even patriotism, is now conceded to the leaders of the corrupt Tammany Hall gang, only because they furnish the means out of the moneys stolen from the City to carry on this, your good work. What good can come of such a reform movement? What will become of our country if such corrupt bargaining should carry the day? These questions the voters of the United States will answer on election day by the triumphant election of the regular Republican candidates. Having always been a member of the Republican Party, it is impossible for me to act with you any longer; for truth crushed down will rise again, and therefore, abhorring the shameful coalition with the Tammany Hall Democrats, I return again to the true Republican Party, and shall exercise the first and most holy duty of every citizen—that of voting—by casting my ballot on election day for the regular Republican ticket, and let our watchword be victory—victory of the whole Republican ticket, for the success of which I shall hereafter bend all energies. JACOB C. HOFFMAN.

"Bad Campaign Tactics."

Under this head, the Express of last evening publishes the following as an "editorial." It does not say that it has stolen it from some other paper, and the intrinsic merits of the article rather lead to the supposition that it is "E. B.'s" own. What it means we cannot exactly say, but it seems intended as a rebuke to the Greeleyites:

"One well-developed, well-fortified fact, proving a man to be, or to have been, corrupt is enough, as signalizing his whole character—but when this one is swamped in dozens of others not true, this ever ceases to hurt the criminally corrupt man—for the public then will not accept or credit the real fact. Hence, we see, besides many other charges, the allegation that five United States Senators had to be purchased to establish in Washington the Potomac Railroad, and thus, without the shadow of a proof, it jeopards the force of other pretty well established facts."

Observe how beautiful is the English language when written by a master.

E. B. Meade—Correction.

We are satisfied we did this gentleman an injustice in classifying him recently as connected with the Tammany Ring. The number to whom the charge rightfully belongs is sufficiently large already without including the innocent, and we accordingly take pleasure in making the correction.

MR. GREELEY "GOING WEST"

A Presidential Candidate in the Disguise of a Farmer.

Apathetic Indifference of the People of New-Jersey to the Philosopher's Movements—"Are You Horace?"—Cheers for Governor Randolph.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 18.—Mr. Greeley arrived here this afternoon on his way to Cincinnati to attend the Industrial Exhibition now being held in that city. He was accompanied by Messrs. James W. Fitzgerald, President of the Board of Council, and Mr. J. L. Kack, President of the Board of Aldermen, Cincinnati, who compose the Committee appointed by the managers of the Industrial Exhibition to request his attendance at the Fair and accept the hospitalities of the city. The invitation was originally extended in a purely non-political spirit, and an invitation was also given to President Grant to accompany the Committee to Cincinnati.

PRESIDENT GRANT DECLINES.

On Friday evening Messrs. Fitzgerald and Kack called upon the President at his cottage in Long Branch, and formally announced the purpose of their visit. The President immediately perceived that a visit to Cincinnati in company with Mr. Greeley, under any pretense, would bear a political aspect, and while courteously acknowledging the invitation, he respectfully, but firmly declined. In a subsequent conversation with the members of the Committee, he expressed his extreme reluctance to attend unnecessary political demonstrations, alleging the indelicacy of such proceeding in a Presidential candidate. His career, he said, previous to and since his election as President, was well known to the nation, and if it could not stand the test of public opinion, it would have to go undefended by political harangues. After an exchange of good wishes the Committee withdrew.

WOULD-BE-PRESIDENT GREELEY ACCEPTS.

They next presented themselves before Mr. Greeley, who was not troubled by the considerations of delicacy or propriety that have hitherto controlled the actions of candidates for Chief Magistrate, but accepted without hesitation, and signified his willingness to enlighten the inhabitants of Cincinnati on what he knows, or perhaps does not know, about farming.

COLD RECEPTIONS.

The journey thus far has not presented much to tickle the vanity of the mock Sage or to increase his chances of success in the political contest. He left Jersey City this morning at 9:40. The Committee of Reception, a few personal friends, the members of the Press, and a few idlers were all that the great man's presence brought together. There was no attempt at a demonstration, and not a single cheer accompanied him on his departure.

At Newark he was joined by Gov. Randolph. About twenty men and boys cheered the Governor and the "philosopher," and the latter gravely took it to himself and bowed. At New-Brunswick about fifty persons were assembled, and Mr. Greeley was called upon the platform. Gov. Randolph introduced Mr. Greeley in a speech, in which he promised him a large Democratic majority in New-Jersey, and expressed his belief in his election next November. Mr. Greeley, in reply to a call for a speech, said he had a long journey to perform, and as he proposed to deliver several open-air addresses, he begged to be excused from making any further remarks. The train then moved off without any manifest enthusiasm.

ILL-TIMED APOLOGIES.

On the cars, Mr. Greeley held little conversation with any one, and evidently was not very well pleased with his reception. His fellow-citizens seemed more hopeful, and were disposed to regard affairs in a more favorable light, but to their excuses for the lack of numbers that came to greet him, and their statement of his strength in the State, he returned quiet and rather doleful responses. The subject then appeared to be studiously avoided, and in having succeeded in inducing Mr. Greeley to enlighten them on the mysteries of squash growing, they became thoughtful and earnest listeners. Later on in the day he offered a single opinion in reference to the present Liberal situation. He claimed to have on his side the thought and intelligence of the nation, if not the numbers and influence.

THANKFUL FOR SMALL FAVORS.

At Trenton about 200 persons cheered for Mr. Greeley, and calls were made for a speech. He said:

CITIZENS OF NEW-JERSEY: In so far as your coming here indicates a personal interest in me, I thank you from my heart. If it also indicates an interest in the great Liberal movement of which I am, to some extent, an exponent, and which, I trust, is destined to reunite our people in the bonds of genuine sympathy, to build up the waste places, the result of the war, to turn aside and efface the bitter memories of a few years back—in so far as your coming here is in sympathy with that movement, I thank you still more heartily. [Applause.] That is all I desire to say now.

"ARE YOU HORACE?"

The Pennsylvania Committee, consisting of Gov. Bigler, Dr. Carpenter and John M. Hutchinson, here joined the party. At Morrisville some fifty pert children, laughing and shouting, "Are you Horace?" greeted the "sage," but the few men who were present uttered not a word and kept aloof. Mr. Greeley, standing on the platform of the cars, watching everything intently, seemed to feel his position. At last, as the train was leaving, a drunken fellow, whose appearance evoked a shout of laughter, came and shook his hand. Mr. Greeley retired in disgust.

A LONGER SPEECH.

At Bristol, about 300 persons received him with a hand. He was introduced by Capt. Cameron, and delivered the following speech:

GENTLEMEN AND LADIES: Pennsylvanians and Jerseymen, I greet your assemblage on this occasion as a happy omen of union and energy in the contest before us. I greet this mingling of people from either side of your great river in one assemblage as a type of the gathering of men from one party and from the other party, in an honest effort to improve the operations of your Government, and to make the American people more united in heart and in sympathy—united not merely under one flag, but united as a people who have differed and have fought, but have settled their controversies and are resolved evermore to live in peace and harmony. [Applause.] I greet, then, your gathering in such vast numbers on this occasion as a joyful omen of what is to be in the election before us. I hold it a sign that New-Jersey on one hand and Pennsylvania on the other will raise their voices and give their votes for the great work of reform and reconciliation on which we have entered. [Cheers.] Friends, neighbors, I bid you a kindly farewell.

Speeches of Mr. Greeley Along the Route.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALTOONA, Penn., Sept. 18.—At Middletown Mr. Greeley spoke as follows:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: You will not expect a speech from me, as I have been traveling and talking all day so far. You will only expect me to say that I come among you, a citizen among citizens, all alike interested in the welfare of our common country, every one of us, I trust, determined so to act, so to deliberate, so to vote as shall in his judgment subserve the high ends of liberty and national prosperity. These are my purposes, and whether in your judgment you are wiser to act in the present contest with me or against me will make no difference as far as I am concerned. You are here citizens of different politics and different parties: but I am sure animated by a common patriotism and earnest purpose that this grand Republic shall receive no detriment at your hands. War, then, against corruption in whatever party; war against whatever would set us against each other and keep us a divided when we should be a united people. Do that which in your own judgments and consciences shall teach you to be best, and I, as my rate, shall acquiesce cheerfully in your verdict.

In a similar speech Mr. Greeley responded to an address from the Harrisburg Committee of Reception. When the party reached Harrisburg a large assemblage awaited his arrival. In reply to a call for a speech, he said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS OF HARRISBURG: Scarcely had the last gun of our great civil war ceased to reverberate over the hills of Virginia, when my voice was raised earnestly if not loudly in favor of forbearance and mercy and amnesty and reconciliation. I felt that there had been bloodshed enough, devastation enough, destruction enough, and that what was now needed was a manifestation of the spirit of heaven-born charity. I remember that dying injunction of the great Hebrew King, David, that vengeance should be wrought on his chief officer, Joab, because he had shed the blood of war in peace. I would have no drop of human blood shed more than absolute necessity should dictate. So, then, at that early day, when the country was infuriated by the assassination of its President, I dared to speak, when there were very few to hear, on the side of forgiveness. Time passed on. At different times I was required, it seemed, to give testimony in unwilling ears. I happen now to be a candidate, very unexpectedly to myself, mainly because of those early utterances. I think they, more than anything else, created the state of things which made me a candidate for your suffrages. I speak these words now because, fellow-citizens, at some time you may be required to speak on popular truths, and I wish you to feel that the truth which today rejects, to-morrow or next day will welcome. Now, I stand above all things the candidate of universal amnesty. I have fought the battle for impartial suffrage until victory is won. I now demand the completion of the national triumph in the relief of every man now disfranchised because of his part in the late rebellion. His relief by a perfect amnesty. We had a glorious promise of that amnesty in the platform of the Republican Party of 1868. That promise has not yet been performed. I stand here to demand that it shall. If I could insure the success of that amnesty better by ceasing to be a candidate, I would gladly do so. I desire only that our disfranchised and proscribed fellow-citizens may be welcomed back under the folds of the national flag, which in an unwise hour they deserted; shall be welcomed back, not as penitents, but as fellow-citizens who, having seen the error of their ways, and having again renewed their old fidelity to their country, shall be like you and me, like every man, white or black in this country, as a citizen simple, and only on that platform. For that purpose I stand before you.

Greeley also delivered short speeches at Newport, Mifflin, Lewiston, Huntington, Tyrone, and shortly after 10 o'clock arrived at Altoona, where he will remain during the night. Mr. Greeley arrived here at Altoona at 10 o'clock this evening, and was very warmly received by a large crowd of his supporters. He was introduced by Gov. Randolph and said:

GENTLEMEN OF PENNSYLVANIA: I am among you a citizen, face to face with his fellow-citizens, simply to say that my being a candidate before you was not my work. It was the choice of others, whether wisely or not I will not say; but I stand before you to-night one of those who believe that there is necessity for reform in the administration of our Government; that there is capacity and ability for it, opportunity for it, and that if the people so will, a beneficent change may be effected. I was early convinced of the truth that no man wielding the mighty and vast power of the Presidential office, as it has grown in our day to be one of the greatest on earth; that no man holding that office should be a candidate before the people. I am now a witness that what the sages and patriots of early days predicted is now an accomplished fact. The journal whereof I am part proprietor, and until I entered upon the canvass was editor, is today hounded all over the country by the minions of power, its packages are torn up and hostile journals are interposed and sent to its subscribers. On the other hand, Senators in Congress addressed the Postmasters, and asked them to furnish a list of subscribers to the Tribune, so that hostile journals may be sent to each of these subscribers. Now, fellow-citizens, such things would never be done unless the same person were at once the President and candidate. No President would allow this to be done for the benefit of another candidate but himself. Such wrongs could not be; such abuse of power could not be. I believe, then, that the apprehension of the greatness of other days have been realized, that the time has come when the people shall decide and determine that no person shall at once be President of the United States and candidate for any office whatever. That conviction, I think, the sober judgment of the intelligent people will affirm and ratify, and in this view, friends and fellow-citizens, I bid you good night, good night.

MAINE.

The True Majority at Last—Republican Congressional Vote Shows 18,182 Majority.

AUGUSTA, Me., Sept. 18.—The complete official returns from the several Congressional districts of this State have been received at the office of the Secretary of State, and will be published in detail in the Kennebec Journal of tomorrow. The Republican majorities are as follows:

First District—Burleigh, 2,195.
Second District—Foye, 4,157.
Third District—Blaine, 3,640.
Fourth District—Hersey, 5,159.
Fifth District—Hale, 3,031.

The aggregate of these Congressional majorities is 18,182, against 9,645 at the preceding Congressional election in 1870. Gov. Perham's majority falls about 1,000 behind the aggregate Congressional majority, owing to the Cider law and other local issues. In the First, Second, Third and Fifth Districts there was not a single scattering vote cast, and in the Fourth there were but three scattering votes. This is unprecedented in Maine elections.

Nearly Complete Vote for Governor.

The following is the statement by counties of the vote for Governor in 469 cities, towns and plantations in Maine, as published by the Augusta Journal:

	Perham. 1871.	Kimball. 1872.	Perham. 1872.	Kimball. 1872.	Perham's majority.
Androscoggin	4,026	2,670	4,540	2,921	1,619
Aroostook	2,165	1,560	2,428	1,870	558
Cumberland	6,093	6,065	8,432	7,684	748
Franklin	1,943	1,789	2,377	1,674	683
Hancock	2,696	2,430	3,556	2,974	852
Kennebec	5,961	3,766	7,434	4,197	3,237
Knox	2,262	2,062	2,353	2,171	82
Lincoln	2,196	2,144	2,682	2,399	282
Oxford	3,928	3,399	4,204	3,620	584
Penobscot	7,125	4,816	9,164	5,847	3,317
Piscataquis	1,551	1,001	1,936	1,158	778
Sagadahoc	1,799	1,109	2,347	1,340	1,007
Somerset	3,802	2,998	4,146	3,421	725
Waldo	3,189	3,043	3,979	3,243	736
Washington	3,108	2,922	4,482	3,679	803
York	5,710	5,332	6,873	5,656	1,217
Total	58,487	47,651	71,834	54,742	17,092

Three towns and eighteen small plantations, not reported, last year gave Perham 370 votes, and Kimball 468. They will not materially affect Perham's majority of 17,082 given above. The entire vote will be about 127,500. The total vote last year of the towns reported above was 106,138, Perham receiving 58,487, and Kimball 47,651; Perham's majority, 10,836. Perham's net gain this year over last is, accordingly, 6,246.

SMALL-POX IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Extraordinary Mortality in Chili and Peru.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The Treasury Department has issued a circular to the Collectors of Customs at the various ports, saying that the Department is in receipt of information, through the Department of State, that at latest advices, Aug. 14, 1872, the small-pox was prevailing to an alarming extent in the Republics of Peru and Chili, the deaths being 200 weekly at Santiago, out of a population of 250,000, and 300 weekly at Valparaiso, out of a population of 150,000. It is also reported that the disease is very severe at Iquique, Peru, and that it is steadily making its way to Callao. Collectors are therefore requested to bring the subject to the attention of the proper authorities in their districts having charge of quarantine regulations, in order that, on the arrival of vessels from the infected ports, they may take such action as they may deem advisable to prevent the spread of the disease.

Judge Richardson in Philadelphia—A Massachusetts Hose Company on a Tour.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 18.—Judge Richardson, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, with his wife and daughter, arrived here yesterday on a special visit to a friend, and returned to Washington at 12 o'clock today. The members of Torrent Hose Company, of Lowell, Mass., visited Independence Hall, where they were formally received by Benjamin L. Temple. They also visited the Union League, Girard College, Fairmount Park, and were entertained at Wissahickon.

The General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance.

Dr. Schaff, of Union Theological Seminary, has returned from Europe. He had authority to invite about fifty distinguished scholars and divines from Great Britain, Germany, France, Holland, Switzerland, and other countries, to attend and to address the General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, which is to be held in New-York in Autumn, 1873. Most of those gentlemen have accepted. Dr. Schaff has also made arrangements with the British Committee on the Revision of the English Bible for American co-operation, and has convened the American revisers for active work.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The Mexican Minister—Gen. Sherman at Head-Quarters.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—There is authority for saying that the statement that Mr. Mariscal, the Mexican Minister, presented his credentials three weeks ago, and that the President answered his speech, alluding to the difficulty which had occurred between the members of the United States and Mexican Claims Commission, is unfounded. Mr. Mariscal was accredited as Minister three years ago, and lately came back to his post after a temporary absence, during which a Chargé D'Affaires ad interim filled his place. His interview with the President was only to deliver some letters from Vice-President Lerdo, announcing his having taken possession of the Presidency after the death of Juarez. There was no formality in such interview, and, consequently, no speeches, the words addressed by the President to Mr. Mariscal having been only of a social character, with no allusion to any public or international affairs.

DRAWBACK ON DAMAGED GOODS.

Under date of April 19, 1872, a resolution was passed by the House of Representatives directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House with a statement of the amount of drawback paid on goods and merchandise imported to the United States at the port of New-York in a damaged condition, from the Pacific, from the 1st day of January, 1866, to the 30th of June, 1871. The statement has just been prepared at the New-York Custom-house, and it shows that the full amount of duties upon goods damaged during the year mentioned and imported, as before stated, was $5,247,254 43, from which was deducted in consequence of the damage occurring on the voyage of importation before mentioned, the sum of $1,139,311 70, showing an average per centum of damage on these cargoes of over twenty-one per cent.

GEN. SHERMAN.

Gen. Sherman was at his office today, and received a multitude of callers, including large numbers of army officers and others, who called to pay their respects and congratulations upon his safe return.

THE WEATHER.

Events and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18—8 A. M.—An area of low barometer has advanced eastward from Minnesota to lower Michigan, accompanied by fresh to brisk and occasional high winds. Cloudy weather, with areas of rain, is now prevailing from Indiana and Ohio to the northern portion of New-York and northward. Otherwise generally clear weather in the stations east of the Rocky Mountains. The temperature has risen somewhat over the Southern States.

PROBABILITIES.

For New-England, on Thursday, south-easterly to south-westerly winds, cloudy weather and probably areas of rain. For the Middle States, to-night, southerly to westerly winds, with cloudy weather and areas of rain, the winds veering to westerly and north-westerly, with clearing weather over the western portion during Thursday morning, and over the eastern portion on Thursday evening. For the Southern States, east of the Mississippi generally clear weather, except, probably, the South Atlantic States. North and north-west of the Ohio Valley, northerly to westerly winds and generally clear weather. Brisk and very brisk winds, veering to north-westerly, are probable for the lower lakes.

Cautionary signals are ordered for Cleveland, Buffalo, Rochester and Oswego.

The Viele Kidnapping Case—Gov. Hoffman Gives a Requisition for the Arrest of Leverson.

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 18.—Gov. Hoffman has given a requisition to Detective-officer James M. Tilley, of New-York, for the person of M. R. Leverson, who is now in New-Jersey. Leverson, it will be remembered, is accused of kidnapping Gen. Viele's child.

The Kentucky Races—Third Day at Lexington.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 18.—The weather was fine for the third day's race, and the attendance large. The first race was a two-mile heat, for a purse of $400, and was won by Aureola in two straight heats. Time—3:37¼, 3:35½.

The second race, mile heats, was won by Cadillader in two straight heats. Time—1:44½, 1:46¼.

BY MAIL AND TELEGRAPH.

The German corvettes, Vineta and Gazelle, sailed from Boston yesterday.

Hon. Augustus S. Porter died at Niagara Falls yesterday, in his seventy-fifth year.

Two hundred and fifty seamen have arrived at Mare Island to join the United States steamer Benicia.

Richard S. Morely, bar-tender at the Cattle Fair Hotel, Brighton, Mass., shot and killed himself on Tuesday night.

The steamer S. F. Merrill, of the White Collar line, was burned last night while lying at her wharf at Warsaw, Illinois.

Auditor Gra

FORRESTER'S FATE.

Astonishing Evidence Against Him Produced in Court.

The Great Secret of Two Years—The Accused Seen at Nathan's House on the Night of the Murder—Who His Accomplices Were.

The Court of Special Sessions was crowded, yesterday morning, by persons desirous of being present at the examination of William Forrester, charged with the murder of Mr. Benjamin Nathan, the banker. Instructions were given Sergt. Quinn not to allow the mob of about a thousand persons, who had congregated in Centre-street, rush in and uncomfortably fill the Court-room, and, as a consequence, the room was conveniently filled, but nothing more. Among the persons present were Mr. James Lewis, Miss Clara Morris and Miss Ida Dietz, of the Fifth-avenue Theatre, George Middleton, Ex-Judge Murray, E. Van Riper and Charles H. Dwyer. Shortly before 11 o'clock, Superintendent Kelso, Capt. Irving and Detective Farley arrived from Central Office with the prisoner. Forrester was dressed in a light gray suit of clothes, and looked well. Mr. Henry W. Davies, the Superintendent of Pinkerton's Detective Agency, came into Court soon after, and had a short conversation regarding Forrester with Superintendent Kelso. Judge Dowling assumed his seat on the Bench, and asked, "Is the prisoner here?" Capt. Irving answered in the affirmative, and Judge Dowling said: "Will the Superintendent of Police take the stand?" Superintendent Kelso took the stand, and testified: "I am Superintendent of the Municipal Police; the affidavit produced by the Court was sworn to by me in the month of October, 1870." Judge Dowling then proceeded to read the affidavit, and by doing so, produced a veritable sensation in Court, for it conclusively proved that on the 29th of October, 1870, Superintendent Kelso believed, from information he had received, that Forrester committed the murder, and in doing so was aided by five other thieves named Thomas Scott, Wattie Dunn, Eugene Coy, Buck Kennedy, and one "Harry," known among criminals as "Little Harry." The affidavit was as follows:

SUPERINTENDENT KELSO'S AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK: James J. Kelso, Superintendent of Municipal Police of the City and County of New-York, being duly sworn, deposes and says, that on the 29th day of July, 1870, Benjamin Nathan, of No. 12 West Twenty-third-street, in th City and County of New-York, was feloniously, willfully, and of malice aforethought, killed and murdered, as this deponent believes in the said City and County of New-York; that deponent has been informed and believes (and he hath just cause to suspect and doth suspect,) that the said murder was committed at the time and place mentioned by William Forrester, and that he, the said Forrester, was aided and assisted by Thomas Scott, Wattie Dunn, Buck Kennedy, Eugene Coy and Harry Doe, (whose proper name is unknown to deponent,) in committing the said murder. Deponent therefore prays that the said William Forrester, Thomas Scott, Wattie Dunn, Buck Kennedy, Eugene Coy and Harry Doe may be arrested and dealt with according to law.

JAMES J. KELSO.

Sworn to before me, this 29th day of October, 1870.
JOSEPH DOWLING, Police Justice.

THE EFFECT ON FORRESTER.

During the reading of Superintendent Kelso's affidavit Forrester changed color, especially at the portion of it referring to his companions in the crime which he is charged with committing. His mouth twitched and he played with the handcuff remaining on his right wrist, as if endeavoring to attract the attention of the many who were looking at him, from his face. But the next witness placed upon the stand was one wholly unexpected, and whose testimony, for over two years carefully suppressed from the public, told against the prisoner with terrible effect yesterday. After the reading of Superintendent Kelso's affidavit, Counselor Howe, who appeared for Forrester, said: "I reserve any questions I have to ask the witness for another day." Then Justice Dowling called Ann Keenan, a neat young lady of twenty-three years of age, with dark hair and eyes, neatly dressed in a purple suit with water-proof cloak, ascended the stand. During her examination, which lasted nearly an hour, she showed unmistakably that she was a lady and a most conscientious witness. Justice Dowling read her affidavit, which was as follows:

MISS KEENAN'S AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK: Ann Keenan, of Fort Lee, State of New-Jersey, being duly sworn, deposes and says that at about twenty minutes to eight o'clock on the evening of Thursday, July 28, 1870, I was passing on the south side of Twenty-third-street, going west toward Sixth-avenue, as I was on my way at the time to the Church of St. Vincent de Paul; I saw a man leaning over the railing in front of Mr. Nathan's house, looking down into it; I had an umbrella in my hand, which touched the sidewalk and made a noise, and attracted his attention; he turned around toward me quickly; he had something in his hand, and it was partly open; his hand appeared to be stiff; seeing me, he wiped his face in a nervous manner with his handkerchief, still having the article mentioned in his hand; he then turned from me toward the gate to the house, and then under the stoop toward the basement; the article I had in his hand struck the gate when he went in, and made a noise like iron; he looked pale; his eyes were wild; I thought he might be crazy; I then quickly passed down the street, and did not see him return from the house; the next morning I was informed that the murder had been committed, and I felt certain in my mind that the man had something to do with it; I felt worried, and decided to give information in reference to it; I then told Rev. Mr. Lyons all I knew in reference to it, and shortly afterward two detectives called to see me at No. 317 East Twelfth-street, where I then resided; I went with them to the office of Superintendent Jourdan, where I also saw the present Superintendent of Police, Mr. Kelso, who was in company with him at the time; I related to them what I have now stated, particularly describing the man's appearance; the man who gives his name as William Forrester I feel morally certain is the same man I saw in front of Mr. Nathan's house that night, as above described.

ANNIE KEENAN.

Sworn to before me this 18th day of September, 1872.
JOSEPH DOWLING, Police Justice.

During the reading of this affidavit, Forrester turned ghastly pale, and looked at the witness with a haggard, wild stare, opening his eyes to their full extent. He quickly recovered his normal calmness, and at the end of the reading, smiled to his counsel, as if to say, "I suspected something of this kind." Justice Dowling said to Miss Keenan: "Look around the room, and tell me if you see that man here now." Miss Keenan, who is somewhat near-sighted, half closed her eyes and did so. The moment her eyes rested on Forrester she said "That is the man, I mean the one in light clothes." Forrester coughed and whispered to his lawyer.

ITS LEGAL OBJECTIONS.

Then Counsellor Howe began the cross-examination of the witness. As a preliminary step, he said: "Although the prisoner makes an emphatic denial of this entire charge, yet it is my duty as his counsel to see that this investigation is conducted with a due respect to the forms of law. There are portions of this affidavit illegal, and they must be examined. The portion I felt certain in my mind that the man had something to do with it; I felt worried and desired to give information in reference to it; I then told Rev. Mr. Lyons all I knew in reference to it." She has no right to state what she felt certain of, and the record should not be loaded with this extraneous matter. I move it be stricken out." Judge Dowling said: "Your motion might be proper before a jury, here I will let the testimony stand." The cross-examination proper was then begun. Miss Keenan said she was a music-teacher by profession, was unmarried and a little near-sighted at the time she saw the man she was going to a church music rehearsal, and desired to reach the church before a rain-storm began. On being asked by Mr. Howe what was the color of his tie, she answered lavender, which was correct. Then she was asked what was the color of Ex-Judge Murray's hair, who was sitting some thirty feet away. She answered, "dark brown," which was right. In various ways Mr. Howe tried to confuse her testimony as to the quality and quantity of her visual powers, and failed.

FORRESTER'S PHYSIOGNOMY.

He then asked her to describe Forrester, which she did minutely. She said that on the night of the murder he wore a dark coat and vest, a soft black felt hat, and light pants. Her description of his features was perfectly accurate until she came to describe his eyes, when she said they were of a grayish brown. Forrester's eyes are of a dark brown, almost black, if not black, in the common acceptance of the word. But this she quickly explained by stating that on the moment when Forrester, turning from the railing, faced her on the night before the murder the gas-light from a lamp in front fell on his face and gave his eyes the grayish tint she alluded to. On hearing this explanation, Mr. Howe asked Miss Keenan if she considered Forrester's eyes were grayish brown at the distance he sat from the witness-stand, and said she could not distinguish, but thought they were. Then, by direction of his counsel, Forrester advanced close to the witness-stand, and Miss Keenan, looking him straight in the face, said she could distinguish the gray hue in his eyes the moment she withdrew from the shade into the stronger light, which came through a large window behind the witness-stand. Mr. Howe then asked her if she had read the papers at the time of the murder, she said she had not, because her time was wholly occupied teaching school, but her mother and other members of her family had mentioned the substance of various articles to her, and on one occasion she has read an article in a Sunday journal which alluded to the heavy reward offered, and also to the fact that suspicion rested on several persons. She had not given much interest to the matter after that, save that every now and then, from time to time, up to the present, the face of the man whom she had seen outside the railings in front of the house would present itself to her memory, and in this way every feature of the prisoner's face became impressed on her mind. She did not see what it was the prisoner held in his sleeve, but she knew there was something there, for the sleeve was stiff, and presented the appearance of a stick of wood being in it beside the man's arm. Part of the substance in the sleeve projected into the man's hand, but was covered by his handkerchief, and when he raised his arm, to wipe his face, it seemed as if he had the handkerchief in his hand to conceal that portion of the substance which projected from his sleeve. She did not know of Forrester being arrested until Detective Farley called on her and said she was wanted at Police Head-quarters. She saw Superintendent Kelso, and he said that a man had been arrested and would be brought before her for identification. She went into Capt. Irving's private room in the Detective office, Capt. Irving being the only one there, and in a moment after Forrester opened the door and came in, followed by Farley, whom she knew to be a detective. She recognized Forrester instantly. Forrester wore a light brown coat, and had a small imperial on his chin. This last assertion was evidently a mistake on the part of Miss Keenan, as Forrester has not worn a goatee or imperial since his arrest. Mr. Howe questioned Miss Keenan as to the color of the coat Forrester wore when she identified him. A Mr. Wm. E. Stewart, of No. 2 Hall-place, who was in Court, and wore a brown coat, was called forward, and Miss Keenan said Forrester's coat was lighter in color than the one Mr. Stewart wore. A lady residing in Titusville, Penn., who happened to be in Court, wore a suit of light buff cloth, and Miss Keenan said that Forrester's coat was just one shade darker. The Pennsylvania lady, as a favor to the prisoner, a counsel, cut a piece of cloth out of the pocket of her dress, which piece was put in evidence. Judge Dowling then made one of his jokes, saying that Mr. Howe, for a lawyer, dealt with his witnesses in an extraordinary way, beginning by cutting their clothes off. Mr. Howe responded by affirming there was such a sincere admiration expressed for the concomitants of modern burlesque acting that he felt it his duty to encourage and create dramatic art. Mr. Howe then said he could not proceed further until the coat which Forrester wore when identified by Miss Keenan was produced in Court. This necessitated an adjournment, and on District-Attorney Garvin saying that he would be engaged on next Friday morning, the examination was set down for Monday next.

Judge Dowling remanded Forrester to the Tombs, instead of Police Head-quarters, and in a very few minutes the Court-room was deserted.

FORRESTER'S DEFENSE.

A TIMES reporter had a conversation with counselor William F. Howe, representing Forrester, before the proceedings of yesterday were begun. Counselor Howe stated that he had a perfect defense for Forrester, and would prove that Forrester was arrested in New-Orleans by the Chief of Police there on the 18th of June, 1870, and would place his whereabouts South so as near the time of the commission of the murder as to render it impossible for him to have been in this City at the time of the crime. Whether this line of defense will be changed owing to the unexpected testimony of Miss Keenan or not, is not known.

SUPERINTENDENT KELSO'S STATEMENT.

Superintendent Kelso yesterday afternoon informed a TIMES reporter that he would prove a strong case against Forrester, and was prepared to combat, as he thought, successfully, any defense the prisoner might make. He called the attention of the reporter to the fact that although the evidence of Miss Keenan had been in the possession of himself and officers for two years, it was kept secret as the grave, and referred to the fact with pride, as something unusual in police annals. In reference to Forrester being seen by Miss Keenan to enter the basement of Nathan's house, Superintendent Kelso said that he and his detectives, from the very start, knew the house was entered by the basement, and in no other way. In conclusion, the Superintendent adverted to the opinion held by many that Forrester was innocent, and said it was extraordinary that respectable persons of fair education should, because a known thief and murderer, says he is able to prove an alibi, believe him innocent, when every respectable and recognized lawyer will say that a thief who will endeavor to prove an alibi is a scoundrel.

THE DEAN RICHMOND.

Details of the Fire, How It Occurred, and the Damage It Caused—Full Statement by Capt. Christopher.

Considerable misunderstanding having existed in this City in reference to the origin of the fire on board the steamer Dean Richmond, of the Peoples' line of Albany steam-boats, a TIMES reporter visited Capt. Christopher on board yesterday, and the report of that gentleman, as follows, satisfactorily disposes of the various false rumors afloat:

STATEMENT OF CAPT. CHRISTOPHER.

We left Pier No. 4, North River, on Monday evening, at 6:20 o'clock, and proceeded on our trip to Albany at the usual speed. At 9:20, when off Caldwell's Landing, a small hole in one of the flues of the port boiler allowed the water and steam to rush into the furnace, causing a gas to generate. This gas was forced out through the front doors of the furnace by a current of air, and immediately filled the furnace-room and middle deck with a sheet of flame. The paint on the timber-work of the vessel, and a portion of the freight lying around caught fire. The alarm of fire was raised, and the hose, which is always in readiness, attached, a copious supply of water being pumped on the ignited timbers and freight by the donkey engine. We had between 250 and 300 passengers on board, including many women and children. As I did not know the exact extent of the fire, and found that a good deal of excitement existed among the passengers, I thought best, under the circumstances, to beach the vessel, and for that purpose headed her for Roy Hook Dock, at the same time keeping the whistle blowing for assistance; in about ten minutes we had reached the shore, and the vessel was run upon the beach; by this time the fire had been completely extinguished, very little damage having been done; the steamer Champion, going to Chatham and Pleasant Valley, returning from an excursion to Iona Island, had heard my signals for assistance and came alongside. I told the passengers that there was no danger whatever, as the fire was entirely subdued; but a number of them left the vessel, some going on board the other steamers and others scrambling ashore over the bow of my own boat. Finding on examination that the steamer had sustained no injury by being run ashore, I determined on trying to get her off, and with the assistance of the New Champion and Pleasant Valley succeeded in getting her off safely. I then found that I could make the remainder of the trip in safety with one boat, and determined on doing so. The passengers were notified that the steamer was about to resume her trip, and those on board the Pleasant Valley returned to the Dean Richmond, while those on the New Champion proceeded to Poughkeepsie, where they took the cars for Albany. A number of the passengers who had gone ashore were brought on board by a small boat, the remainder having gone to Peekskill. All being in readiness, the Dean Richmond resumed her journey, and arrived in Albany at 8:20, only two and a half hours behind time.

WILLIAM H. CHRISTOPHER.

The Dean Richmond arrived at Pier No. 41 North River at the accustomed hour, yesterday morning, and took in her freight, as usual, for last evening's trip. The traces of the fire are very slight, and would scarcely be noticed except pointed out.

National Rifle Association.

A meeting of the Executive Committee and of the Board of Directors of the National Rifle Association was held at No. 194 Broadway on Tuesday last. Gens. Shaler, Woodward and Sigel; Capt. Wingate, Majors Smith, Powell and others were present.

It was stated that the engineer was at work on the range with a force of men and that the marker's butts were nearly finished.

Gen. Woodward reported that he had visited Albany, and had a consultation in regard to awarding the State prize of $500 provided by act of the Legislature of last Winter. That the Adjutant-General had stated that a number of the Colonels of the different regiments throughout the State had failed to file their bonds and comply with the requisite formalities required to enable him to issue new Remingtons, and that in consequence, in his opinion, the different regiments of the National Guard did not stand on such a footing of equality in regard to arms as would make it judicious for him to offer this prize for competition.

After the election of a number of members and the transaction of routine business, the Board adjourned to meet on Tuesday next.

The Grand Jury List.

The Commissioners of Jurors who have been holding sessions whenever the other duties of the members would permit, since the first Monday in September, concluded their labors yesterday. The Board consisted of Judge Chas. P. Daly, of the Court of Common Pleas, presiding; Chief-Justice Barbour, of the Superior Court; City Judge Bedford and Recorder Hackett, of the Court of General Sessions; Judge Ingraham, of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, and Mayor Hall. A carefully-prepared list of 783 names was chosen from the petit jurors for the year, from which will be chosen the Grand Juries for the Courts of Oyer and Terminer and General Sessions for the ensuing year.

A Case of Supposed Poisoning.

Coroner Schirmer was called to investigate the cause of death of August Cohen, a German, thirty years of age, who died on Tuesday night, at No. 208 East Eighth-street. Dr. Thompson, of East Twelfth-street, who attended deceased in his last illness, refused to grant a certificate of death. In the opinion of the doctor death had resulted from acute meningitis, either from excessive use of stimulants or from poison of some kind. A thorough investigation will be made.

The Times on the Long Island Road.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In passing over the Long Island Railroad last week I was disappointed in not being able to procure a copy of the TIMES. On asking the newsboy the reason of his being short of that paper he replied: "There are too many Grant men on the road." On further inquiry I learned that his sales for that day had been as follows, viz.: TIMES, 150; Herald, 75; Tribune, 45; World, 30. Judging from this the "tidal wave" has not entirely submerged Long Island. P. Q.

THE WARD ISLAND INQUIRY.

Testimony of the Warden and Keepers—The Post-Mortem Examination—Conflicting Testimony—Farrell Committed.

The examination into the circumstances attending the deaths of John W. Ornell and Horatio Seymour, lunatics lately confined in Ward's Island Asylum, was commenced yesterday morning before Coroner Keenan, who was assisted by Dr. Wooster Beach. The first witness was Mr. Edward Burke, Warden of the Lunatic Asylum on Ward's Island. He testified as follows:

I know very little of this case, as I was absent at the time; the first thing I heard of it was on Monday night; I was told that one of the patients had been abused by an attendant, Thomas Farrell, and that he had died in consequence; the lunatic was John W. Ornell; I had Farrell arrested and locked up in the Station-house of the Twelfth Precinct; Dr. Echeverria, the resident physician, took down the depositions; I notified the Coroner of the facts, and of the necessity of an examination into the cause of the death; I have heard since of the death of another patient, named Horatio Seymour, colored, who expired on Monday evening at half-past four o'clock, and, as is supposed, from the same cause, namely—injuries inflicted by Thomas Farrell; Ornell had been a patient since May 23, 1872, and died Sept. 12; Seymour was admitted July 31, 1872, and died Sept. 16, 1872; they were both in Ward M, but not at the time; they had been in another ward, but had been transferred a short time before their deaths; there were three keepers to that ward at the time of this occurrence—Edward Ball, Patrick McLaughlin and Thomas Farrell; the last named was appointed on the 20th day of July, 1872; I never heard of any complaints against Farrell before, but there had been against Crawford, and he was dismissed; the charge against him was for assaulting one of the patients; I dismissed him, and the Commissioners restored him about a month ago; it often happens that patients have a black eye, or a scratch on the face, or something similar, which I am able to trace, in consequence of the incoherent accounts of the sufferers; it is likely that this resulted from struggles among the patients themselves; the duties of the keepers are to see that the patients are kept clean, that they rise and go to bed at proper time, that they don't injure each other, and that they are properly fed; they have no power to punish by striking, slapping, or hitting with a strap, except in the most extreme cases of self-defense.

This closed the evidence of the Warden, who desired to state that an insane woman named Mrs. Mackintrae had told him, just before he left the Island to give his testimony, that she had seen an insane man kick Ornell many times when he was lying on the ground.

The next witness was Gonzales Echeverria, the resident physician of the Asylum. He said: I have been connected with the institution since its opening in December last; I was absent from the Asylum during the month of August and returned from my vacation on the 1st of September; I then heard that charges had been published in some of the daily papers concerning the brutal treatment received by the patients in Ward M; I also received similar complaints from the patients themselves, and also from their relatives; I found that the condition of the patients in Ward M was very different from what it had been when I left it; they were very filthy and full of marks in their faces and bodies, decidedly proceeding from violence; I remonstrated with attendant Ball about the condition of the ward, and told him that the patients were evidently ill-treated, and that if he did not prevent it, I would see to it; on Monday, the 9th of September, during my morning visit, my attention was called by Ball to the condition of John Ornell, who was then lying in bed perfectly naked; I had seen him the day previous, and he apparently looked very well; I found him in bed in a state of collapse; he was quite cold, perspiring clammy, and bearing all the signs of having received a violent shock; he had a black eye, his right shoulder was bruised, he had a recent red mark on the right side of the chest, his left side was also marked with red spots. He could hardly be roused, but still he was rational and understood my questions. He had his hand across his stomach at the time. I asked him if he had been hurt, and he replied that the men in the hall had hurted him. I asked him if he meant the attendants, and he replied "Yes." I asked him again if he could say which one it was, and he answered "the tall one." Commissioners Bowen and Frear came that morning to see Ornell, and I reported to them the facts and the critical condition of Ornell. They at once instituted an investigation, and had attendants Ball and Farrell examined. Both denied that they had hurt Ornell; thereupon the Commissioners left the investigation open in my hands that I might further examine Ornell. About 4 o'clock, afternoon of the same day, Monday, Ornell seemed to revive, and I then took the three attendants into the ward before him, requesting him to answer yes or no to my question as to which one hurt him. To the question, when I presented Ball, "Was this the man?" he said "No." He also said "No" also for McLaughlin. But when I presented Farrell, he said "Yes." I asked him again, "Was that the man?" He replied, "Yes, he hurt me." Farrell laughed, and said: "Doctor, he don't understand. But he replied: "Yes, you hurt me with the feet, hopping on my body." I took the words and he repeated exactly what he had told them. He afterward added: "Yes, you did; I will tell everybody; I will tell no lie." I sent the deposition to the Commissioners that evening, and the man Farrell was discharged on Wednesday. Ornell died on Thursday afternoon about 2 o'clock. He was rational from Monday until a very few minutes before death. I had visited him three or four times a day, and every time I questioned him as to the man who hurt him, and he replied every time the tall man. On one occasion he added "the man with the swelling in his eye." I could entertain no doubt that he was completely rational, and that he fully recognized the man who hurt him.

On Saturday, after I returned from the Court at Harlem, about 9 A. M., I was informed by the assistant resident physician that Horatio Seymour, a patient in Ward M, was in a dying condition. I went to examine him, and I found him with symptoms of high fever, peritonitis, acute peritonitis. He told me that he had been kicked and ill-treated by Farrell, and gave a very rational account of the manner in which that man had abused him. He repeated the same statement every time I saw him until his death, on one occasion telling me that the man with a lump on his eye had kicked him. Seymour died on Monday evening. I assisted in making a post-mortem examination on his body about twenty-five hours after death. Dr. Echeverria then read the following:

Post-mortem examination of Horatio Seymour, a negro, made about twenty-five hours after death, Sept. 17, 1872.

Body not emaciated; well marked with muscular development; cadaverous rigidity manifest; cut on the top of the head, a little to the right side, and close to it a mark of another cut fully healed; abscess of old duration opened in right ear; two abrasions over the right shoulder, on external side of right arm; the back of this right shoulder there were two superficial longitudinal dark marks, one inch and a half long and one-eighth of an inch wide. There is a very slight superficial and diffuse discoloration of the skin on the lower part of the right side of the chest; abrasion on left leg just below the knee, midway between the knee and foot; large suppurating ulcer on external side of right heel. Under the skin and in the middle of the front of the chest on a line with the third rib there is a very recent extravasation of blood of oval shape, about the size of a silver dollar. The left rib is also fractured about one inch from the cartilage, the fragments being ununited and surrounded by suppuration. The eighth and ninth ribs of the left side are also three inches from the cartilage, both fractures appearing of recent occurrence. On the right side the sixth and seventhe ribs are fractured, the sixth about an inch and a half from the cartilage. The edges of the fragments in the sixth right rib were surrounded by a thick glutinous serosity. There were slight adhesions extending over the whole of both lungs, which appeared otherwise healthy, with the exception of a very distinct circumscribed spot of inflammation, beneath the fractured ribs, on the right side, corresponding to the upper portion of the lower lobe of the right lung. The heart was rather large, but healthy. The liver, stomach and spleen are natural. The intestines did not seem inflamed. The kidneys pale and enlarged; looked as though in an early stage of fatty degeneration. A recent extravasation of blood the size of a silver half-dollar existed under the skin of forehead, over the right eye. There was a large doubtful subcutaneous mark, also on the left side of the back of the head. On opening the skull, which is rather thick, from the right side, and a film of recently extravasated blood covered almost the whole brain; this blood was superficial to the brain under the dura mater, as usually observed in cases of severe violence to the head. Over the right and upper part of the head the blood was more firmly coagulated than in any other parts. There was no fracture of any of the bones of the skull, which were thick. No ruptures of membranes of the brain, or collection of serum or extravasation of blood was discovered in the brain, which showed a healthy looking consistency and appearance in every other respect.

The doctor concluded by remarking: I should say the death was caused by violence, kicks and blows.

The next witness was Samuel Cordon, an aged lunatic, very gray and feeble, and of a quiet subdued manner. Being sworn, he tesified that he was now an inmate of the Asylum, but had been previously confined two weeks ago by the doctor; he said his memory was not sufficiently distinct upon the events of the inquest; he remembered Ornell's entrance into the ward; he was quite weak, and inclined to lie down in the floor; on several occasions he saw Farrell kick him to make him get up, but not severely; never saw blood on him after kicking; Ornell was a cripple, and used to hop on one leg; he had seen Seymour kicked and abused on several occasions; at one time Farrell struck him on the side of his head with such violence that an abscess in his ear burst and the pus burst out upon the wall; on another occasion he knocked him down and stamped on him; Seymour was very harmless, and did not seem to offer any resistance; after he had stamped on him Farrell said, "Seymour, you wouldn't be afraid to enter a den of tigers, would you?" and Seymour said he would not; sometimes he beat him with a leathern strap, such as go round trunks; Seymour would go quietly and sit down somewhere to scratch himself; he never saw Seymour's head knocked against any hard substance, or any violent blow struck upon it; Seymour's head was bad when he came in; the witness had himself been beaten by a keeper called Jerry, in Ward M, and several times by Farrell also, all over his body, but not severely; O'Brien, a patient, was accustomed to strike Seymour also, and to send him to his seat; he had seen O'Brian strike him in the back with his fist.

The next witness was Edward Ball, a keeper of the Lunatic Asylum on Ward's Island. He testified that in the case of John Ornell, he knew him very well from the time he entered the Asylum, when he was in ward H; he had an iron shoe attached to his left leg, which limb was somewhat drawn up; he had a habit of striking patients as they passed him, with his right hand; his left was partly paralyzed; he was transferred to Ward M some time in August, and at that time was very feeble; sometimes he would come to his meals and at other times would refuse them; about three or four days previous to his being put to bed he became very filthy, which the witness attributed to diarrhea; on the day when the doctor examined him he got up and put on his clothes as usual, but as he was suffering from diarrhea the witness put him to bed and reported him as being very sick to the doctor, who then said he thought he had been knocked down; he objected to this that the man could not stand and was continually lying on the floor. The witness here objected to some part of Dr. Echeverria's testimony. He denied that Ornell was asked if he or if McLaughlin had struck him, but Ornell did certainly testify that Farrell hopped on him. As to injuries received by the two deceased patients from other patients, he testified that Charles Conkling had struck Ornell; he was not violent, but he was very ferocious when going to meals; he died about eight or ten days ago; repeatedly he had been obliged to take hold of him by the throat to prevent him from choking himself; on one occasion this man, rushing to the table, pushed Ornell violently against the wall, which, in his opinion, accounted for the black eyes.

The witness before concluding stated that the matron, Mrs. Benday, told him that Ornell's evidence should not be believed, for she had questioned him when this hopping occurred, and Ornell said it took place in a lager-bier saloon on Fourth-street. With regard to the statements of Seymour he thought that he answered to leading questions, and that if he had been asked if Ball or McLaughlin had beaten him he would have said yes. It was impossible to learn what took place at night time when the keepers were off duty and the watchman was in charge. On one occasion Mr. Cordon, the witness, had inflicted a terrible wound on the arm of a patient named Devine, by violently striking him.

The next witness was Patrick McLaughlin, attendant in the Asylum, who said that he could corroborate all that Mr. Ball had stated. When Ornell was questioned by Doctor Keough Farrell forward and kept him back, and it was his impression that if he had come forward Ornell would have identified him instead of Farrell.

This concluded the case, and the jury, after retiring for a few minutes, brought in the following verdict:

"We believe that the deaths of John Ornell and Horatio Seymour were hastened by the treatment received at the hands of Thomas Farrell."

Mr. Farrell stated that he was not guilty, in answer to the Coroner's inquiry if he wished to make any statement.

Farrell was then conveyed to the Tombs, to await the action of the Grand Jury.

INGERSOLL'S SURETIES.

A Large Amount of Property Transferred for the Purposes of the Bond—The Sureties Not Yet Approved.

James H. Ingersoll's sureties appeared before Judge Leonard, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, for the purpose of justifying in the suit brought against Ingersoll in the name of the people. Ingersoll was represented by his counsel, Mr. Elihu Root, and Mr. Peckham appeared on behalf of the people. The sureties were Lorin Ingersoll, father of the defendant, of No. 105 East Twenty-first-street, and his partner in the chair business, at No. 91 Bowery; Mr. William W. Watson, who resides at No. 70 Park-avenue. Mr. Lorin Ingersoll swears to being worth over $700,000, above debts or liabilities, and Mr. Watson over $400,000. The amount of the bond to the Sheriff is $500,000, the sureties being required to justify in double the amount.

Upon his cross-examination by Mr. Peckham, Mr. Lorin Ingersoll swears that he owns one-half interest in the property running through from Bowery to Chrystie-street, and occupied as a chair factory, stores, &c., amounting to $125,000; owns three lots on the north side of One Hundred and Eighteenth-street, valued at $10,000; owns a lots, and buildings thereon, on Twenty-third-street, running through to Twenty-second-street and Eighth-avenue, comprising cabinet factory, stores and dwelling-houses, of the value of $500,000; has an interest in the chair business in the Bowery amounting to $90,000; owns eighty-five shares of the Bowery National Bank, worth over par; owns a mortgage on a house and lot in One Hundred and Thirty-second-street for $7,500; owns another mortgage on a house in Forty-second-street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, for $5,000; owns sixty lots in West Morrisania, worth $50,000; owns dock property on the East River, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth streets, worth $30,000; has a loan out of $50,000, secured by $60,000 worth of the stock of the Tenth National Bank; is worth, in all, perhaps $800,000 or $900,000.

Mr. Watson, also on cross-examination, testified that he owns property in Sixty-fifth-street worth $40,000; owns an interest in the ownership real estate in Bowery and Chrystie-street, valued at $125,000; owns property at No. 94 Beekman-street, his interest amounting to $17,500; owns a farm of sixty-five acres near Orange, N. J., worth $20,000; owns mortgages on twelve lots in the neighborhood of Fourth-avenue and Sixty-seventh-street, amounting to $100,000; has a mortgage on house and lot in Harlem for $3,500; has a mortgage on a house in Morrisania for $4,500; has a mortgage on property in Elizabeth, N. J., for $50,000; owns a mortgage on property in Perth Amboy for $10,000; has personal property, amounting to $35,000; owns $25,000 worth of the Tammany stock; owns a mortgage on the hotel property on Fifth-avenue, near Fifty-ninth-street, for $50,000; owns 100 shares of Bowery National Bank stock, valued at $17,500, and has $45,000 invested in the cabinet business at No. 91 Bowery.

It appeared in the course of the examination that stocks and mortgages included in Watson's property, amounting to $125,000, were conveyed to him for a nominal consideration since he placed his name on the bond, by Lorin Ingersoll, his co-bondsman, and $500,000 of the latter's property had been conveyed to him in August last, for a consideration of $1, by Mr. Willam H. Ogilvie, the father-in-law of Jas. H. Ingersoll, to enable him to justify on this bond.

Mr. Peckham therefore objected to the Court that property made up in this form was not satisfactory surety, and the sureties could not justify.

Mr. Root said the testimony showed that the property was transferred without reservation, and in no event were either of the bondsmen under obligation to return it.

Judge Leonard reserved his decision.

A Recently-Married Woman Cuts Her Throat with a Razor.

Mrs. Susan Gormley, aged twenty-four, residing on the top floor of the tenement-house No. 301 East Thirty-ninth-street, committed suicide, yesterday, by cutting her throat with a razor, while temporarily insane. The deceased woman was subject to fits of epilepsy, which induced a condition of terrible despondency, during which she was for the time perfectly insane. At 5 o'clock yesterday she went down stairs to the wood-house in the cellar to get some kindling-wood to prepare her husband's breakfast. As she remained down-stairs a much longer time than seemed to him necessary, her husband became alarmed, and went down-stairs to see what was detaining her. On entering the wood-house he was horrified to find his wife lying dead on the floor, with a terrible gash in her throat, and a razor covered with blood still clutched in her hand. An examination of the body showed that the woman had been dead but a few moments. Coroner Schirmer held an inquest. Mrs. Gormley had been married but four months, and her domestic relations were of the happiest nature.

General Sessions Business Yesterday.

Among the cases on the calendar at the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Judge Bedford presiding, were the following:

Martin Forrester, a gross-looking man, was tried for an assault upon a little girl of twelve years, Hermina Gatt, of No. 248 West Thirty-fifth-street, but was acquitted, the proof not being clear.

William J. Meagher, aged seventeen, was found guilty of petty larceny and sent to the Penitentiary for six months.

Susan Wilson and Josephine Clark were tried for robbing Martin Brai, of No. 90 East Main-street, Paterson, of $130, while asleep in their room in a house in Greene-street. They were sentenced to one year's imprisonment.

Officer Patrick Ginley, of the Eleventh Precinct, charged William Dunn, of No. 15 Dry Dock, with having assaulted him with an ax on the 13th of August last, cutting his hand badly. When the witnesses for the defense took the stand it appeared that the officer began the attack by clubbing Dunn in an unwarrantable manner, merely because, as it appeared, he had made use of the expression "Paddy the horse," by which, it seems, the officer is called in the neighborhood. The case was adjourned until to-day.

HUNGARY.

Meeting of Parliament.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PESTH, Tuesday, Sept. 3, 1872.

This morning I went to the hall where the Hungarian Parliament was opened. It was merely a formal opening, and to-morrow the members will meet in the hall in Ofen in national costume to hear the speech from the throne. Then all the magnates will appear in their brilliant and graceful costume of past centuries, and the ordinary members in the embroidered Hungarian coat. There will soon, however, be heavy and very modern business before them. The difficulties of the Hungarians in their present political position are innumerable.

NATIONALITIES.

First comes the question of nationalities. If your readers will imagine the poorest Irish peasants of our country, most of whom could not read or write, and who were utterly under the influence of ignorant priests, suddenly elevated to the suffrage, and demanding separate representation in Congress, keeping themselves a distinct nationality, often in connection with powerful bodies of Celts in other countries, hostile to ours, they will appreciate the difficulty of the Hungarian position—especially toward the Wallachs. Had the Hungarians, when they widened the suffrage, instead of making a very small property qualification, (a ground tax from $1 50 to $3,) considered the mistakes of Democracy in other countries, and established an intelligence basis for suffrage, they would be now in a happier and safer position. But each nation, apparently, like every young man, must get his own experience and suffer from his own blunders. Both Germany and England are treading the same paths of Democracy, with the same dangers ahead. Had it been required that every voter should read and write, the legitimate objects of the Hungarians would have been gained; they would have kept out the ignorant masses from the Government, and those masses would have been mainly Wallachs and serfs. There would have been no injustice in it, as an ignorant Hungarian would have been excluded, as well as an ignorant Wallach or Slovack. But they chose the other way, and in order to keep down these ignorant crowds of Wallach peasants they resorted to some ingenious dodges of "districting," with which we are familiar in America. By giving separate votes to certain large villages where are the Magyars, and by applying the proportion of one representative to 30,000 to the large cities, where are the Wallachs, they have undoubtedly increased their own proportionate representation, and diminished the Wallach. In Transylvania this is still more the fact. Still it is just to the Hungarians to say, that they explain this apparent injustice as mainly the fruit of hasty legislation, which has sometimes told against themselves. However that be, it has left no sting behind it among the Wallachs. The truth is, that the mass of these Rouman peasants are in no way fitted to be voters or members of a representative Government. A very small proportion of them can read and write. They are excessively poor, living in a squalid condition, and they are utterly under the influence of priests and demagogues. Their leaders are no doubt in relations with the Wallachian leaders in the principalities, and whoever knows anything of Wallachian semi-civilization there, will agree that neither gods nor men could desire success to such a race. Their physical type and costume is extremely interesting—a round, high head, as of a saint or bigot; long, flowing black hair; high cheek bones, with somewhat "Roman" noses, and a mild, weak expression. The dress, a night-gown and high boots, with a kind of leather cuirass around the middle, and a very broad-brimmed black hat; in cool weather a sheep-skin hung gracefully on one shoulder—an exceedingly striking figure in the landscape. If any one examines the pictures on the Trajan columns he will see the Dacians represented with just such broad leather girdles and with similar profiles. They may not improbably be the descendants of Dacians and Roman soldiers. I have not spoken of other nationalities, as the Wallachs are the only formidable body who are disaffected. The Germans of Transylvania, it is true, are exceedingly bitter against the Hungarians, but they scarcely number two hundred thousand; and the Serbs are dangerous, as being in connection with the Serbs over the borders, but they are not numerous nor united. The Wallachs, though belonging to the Oriental Greek Church, are not Slavonians, and probably not under Russian influence. The truth is, it is for the interests, both of civilization and liberty, that the Magyars—a compact, intelligent, liberty-loving race, of the best capacities and long habit of self-government, numbering five or six millions of the best of Hungary, should govern the other ten mostly often ignorant and degraded populations. They must do it justly, of course, but till they have educated the Wallach and the Serb and the Slovack, they are better at the helm, guiding the ship of State—and a moderate exclusion of these tribes from control is for the interest of Europe.

EDUCATION.

The question of questions for Hungary is education. In Transylvania

THE SIOUX VISITORS.

Talk of the Chiefs with the Secretary of the Interior.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The Grand River Sioux Indians called on the Secretary of the Interior today. They were attired in full savage costume, replete with feathers and council paint. The proceedings opened by the Secretary inviting them to make known their wants, and assuring them of the desire of the Government and people to preserve friendly relations with them. The Indians consulted for some moments, seemingly not inclined to commence a talk until they met the great father, the principal Chiefs insisting that it would be right for them to consult together before talking at this council. The Secretary, however, said he sent for them at the request of the President, who is now away, but would be back before many days, and he intended they shall see him before they return to their own country. He told them that the Great Father had many things to do, and had not as much time to hear them as he had, and all they had told him he (the Secretary) would communicate to the Great Father. He explained also to them that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who was the man with whom they had to deal, should know all their wants. After these suggestions, the chiefs thought proper to commence the talk, and several of them made speeches, all of which were of some purport. They complained of the poverty under which they lived, and repeated their desire to be on good terms with the whites.

Two Bears, who led off, asserted he had no desire to do anything wrong, and that much of the wrong that had been laid to him was done by other nations. He made a request for guns and ammunition, and said he could not farm as the whites do with his fingers, neither could he learn farming in a short time. He also alluded in the usual Indian strain to the destruction of his lands by whites.

Two Bears was followed by Grass, who had many complaints to make of not having been properly treated by the whites. He said that they had been misled, and declared that for the roads which were now in possession of the whites, the chiefs had been promised $7,000 each. Grass laid great stress upon the human anxiety for riches, and said he did not want to die poor. He spoke with much earnestness, and complained that lands which were properly his, were in possession of other tribes, mentioning those occupied by Red Cloud and Spotted Tail, (whose late presence here he alluded to,) as being territory upon which he had a rightful claim.

Running Antelope, a large, powerful-looking chief, who spoke very fast and in a loud tone, said that, now he had shaken hands with the Great Father's chiefs, his heart was laughing and he felt good. He wanted provisions for the future, mentioning that there should be enough for two hundred years, as he did not expect to die as soon as he went home. This chief did not neglect to allude to the poverty of himself and his people, and to the lands which he said were his own property, and through which the white man's roads ran. He did not want any whites settling in his country forever two hundred years, and said he supposed if the white men who were building the railroad should get a paper from the Great Father telling them to take it up, they would do so. This expression met with a simultaneous grunt of approval from every Indian present.

At the conclusion of this speech the Secretary told the delegation that, as he had to see another delegation (the Teton Sioux, who were received later in the day, and who also arrived here with Assistant Secretary Cowan,) he would have no further time to hear them at present; they would have another opportunity to hold council with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The Secretary believed they were friendly, and believed the words they had told him. He wanted them now to believe that what he told them was true. The Great Father cannot step the white man from his railroads, buildings, houses, cities and railroads. The Secretary explained that wild game was becoming scantier under the condition of things he had mentioned, and assured them that while they kept the peace, and endeavored to live like the whites they would receive assistance from the Great Father and their people. As fast as the Indians go to farming, they would have everything they were entitled to under the treaties. He told them he thought the country where they lived was a poor country, though he had never seen it. But when they were willing to work, then it was a better country, where they could have the advantages of civilization he had alluded to. He explained that he did not want to force them to go, but would give them every assistance in moving to it when they expressed a willingness to do so. He also told them that every Indian who would go farming next Spring would be given all the agricultural implements named in the treaty.

These Indians claim that under the treaty of 1868 they are entitled, when they go to farming, to all the various kinds of farm implements, stock, &c., and also that they are entitled to a pecuniary consideration for the lands relinquished for the use of their country through which the railroad passes, and their agent states that they have this idea constantly in mind, forcing it into every talk they had concerning their treaty obligation and relation with the Government.

The Teton Sioux were even more gorgeously arrayed in feather and paint than the Grand River Sioux, and, seated in the room of the Secretary, presented a very picturesque scene. Before the council opened the pipe was lit and passed around, almost every one in the room taking a puff. All the Chiefs were successively introduced by Gen. Cowan, and about 10 A. M. by Secretary Delano, at the end of which the Secretary made a short speech to the Indians, expressive of his pleasure at receiving them, the good will of their Great Father and the desire of the Government to cultivate friendly relations with them. After fully expressing these friendly sentiments and promising that the Indians should have an interview with their Great Father, Secretary Delano went on to inform the assembled chiefs that if they and their braves, notwithstanding the Great Father's friendship, did not live at peace with the whites, but robbed and plundered and made war the Great Father would have to send soldiers to punish them. He did not want to do this, but, on the contrary, wished to do everything in his power to prevent it, and had sent for them here to tell them so. Now, he wanted Medicine Bear to say what he and his braves intended to do, whether to live at peace or not.

The first part of the Secretary's speech elicited many grunts of approval; the last was listened to with attentive silence.

Medicine Bear then rose and shook hands. He said to his own people that they made him nervous; but he would not talk for them alone, but for the benefit of the whole tribe. To Secretary Delano he said: "Father, look at these people who come here to talk with you and the Great Father. They have got a place where they can get a place to live. There was only one man made this world. He made you and He made me, and made us to be friends and relations, and when He made us He loved you better than me. He taught you everything, and gave the world to the white man, and made me ignorant, and taught how to live. The Minnesota Sioux and Shoshonees got mad at something in which he did not sympathize. He had been poor and waiting ten years for the Great Father to help him. The lower bands have had annuities, but he and his braves have not had any. Now he and his braves were here to see the Great Father, and he hoped the Great Father would talk to him with one heart and not with two. He had always hoped that when he saw the Great Father he would receive from him a great space of ground for his people to live in. Where he now lives the country is very small, and he intended to ask the Great Father for provisions, enumerating among other things four sacks of flour at a time. They needed also guns and ammunition and land to travel on. The white man loved money and they loved land.

At the request of Indian Agent Simonson, the interpreter asked Medicine Bear whether he and his people had not been receiving full rations of flour, sugar and coffee, together with bacon, ever since last April, when they were called into the Council at Fort Peck. Medicine Bear assented to this, but said that the other chiefs would talk about everything he had left out.

Bloody Mouth, a chief of Sitting Bull's band, then made a speech, in which he said his people wanted to come into the agency, and receive assistance regularly.

Long Fox, a very striking looking Rocksna chief, six feet five inches high, commenced his remarks by inviting the Secretary to take a good look at him, so as to see that he was poor. He was ornamented in the most gorgeous extreme of Indian fashion. Subsequently he said: The Great Father had sent them provisions, &c., but not guns, which they needed especially. The speed of ground they lived on was too small, and he hoped the Great Father would take his young men, (meaning soldiers, settlers and railroad surveyors,) out of the country.

Agent Simmons at this point informed Secretary Delano that the small space of ground referred to is three hundred miles long and two hundred wide.

Black Catfish expressed himself as feeling very much at ease with the white chiefs. He felt as if part of this house, (the Interior Department,) belonged to him. In a spirit of frankness he was going to tell the chief, (Delano,) what they wanted, for of course, said he, we did not come here for nothing. His main desire seemed to be for guns and ammunition. The man that Packs the Eagle then made a speech, in which he complained that the young men of the Great Father were making roads through and settling in the Indian country and driving off their game. He wanted to know if the Great Father intended to permit this, instead of leaving the country to their undisturbed possession. For the last ten years he had desired an opportunity to say this to the Great Father.

Afraid of the Bear and Black Eye and others, spoke briefly, expressing some impatience to receive the clothing, &c., which is now on the way for them, and Secretary Delano closed the interview by informing the Chiefs that they would soon have a talk with the Great Father and afterward with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Gen. Walker, who would communicate the Great Father's wishes and decisions. He would now say, however, that the Great Father wanted to and would help them to live like white people, ceasing by degrees to live as they now do, and leaning to have school-houses and churches. If so, their children would be rich and have what the white people enjoy some day. He (Secretary Delano) hoped that they would be willing to go down to a great new country, where the Government would give them land and houses, farms and cattle. The white people would be kept out of this country, which is intended to be and remain the red man's home. He told them this only for them to think about, as the great father did not intend to force them to go from their present home unless they were willing to go; and again reminding them that if they turned their bows and arrows against us the great father would surely send soldiers to punish them.

Secretary Delano then shook hands with them all round, and terminated the interview. Tomorrow the Indians visit the Navy-yard.

TYPHOID FEVER INCREASING.

Comparative Statistics — Action of the Board of Health — The Authorities After the Fat-Meltors.

The Board of Health held their usual weekly meeting yesterday, President Bosworth in the chair. The permit heretofore granted to the proprietors of the fat-rendering establishment, at the south-west corner of Third-street and First-avenue, was revoked.

Commissioner Bosworth called the attention of the Board to the alarming increase of typhoid fever reported by the City Sanitary Inspector. The cases of this disease are reported as thirty-six for the past week against eighteen for the previous week. The matter was referred to the Sanitary Committee for investigation and report.

A resolution, which was adopted, to the effect that the attorney be directed to report in detail the action taken by the Board during the past few months to abate the nuisance created by fat-melting, and to recommend what measures, if any, should be taken.

The Sanitary Committee's report last week showed a total of 1,749 inspections by the Health Inspectors. Permits were granted to fifty-nine vessels to discharge cargoes on vouchers from the Health Officer of this port.

The following is a comparative statement of contagious diseases reported for the two weeks ending Sept. 7 and Sept. 14, 1872:

Sept. 7—Typhus 5, typhoid 18, scarlet 10, measles 15, diphtheria 11, small-pox 3. Sept. 14—Typhus 4, typhoid 36, scarlet 19, measles 1, diphtheria 12, small-pox 3.

The Register of Records reported a registry of 627 deaths, an increase upon the previous week of 56, and an excess of 107 over the corresponding week of 1871. Zymotic diseases occasioned 248 deaths; constitutional, 141; local, 176; developmental, 31; and violent causes, 31. There was but one fatal case of small-pox, the same as in the previous week. Only 10 deaths from this disease have been registered within the past five weeks. During the past week there was no death from measles, a somewhat extraordinary fact, and but 5 deaths were due to scarlatina—these two affections having caused 1 and 6 deaths, respectively, in the preceding week. The mortality of diphtheria and croup fell from 17 to 15, that of whooping-cough from 7 to 4, and that of typhus fever from 4 to 1. The deaths by diarrheal disease increased from 160 to 168, those by cerebro-spinal fever, from 4 to 5; those by typhoid fever, from 4 to 17; those by remittent fever, from 4 to 6, and those by intermittent fever, from 4 to 7. It will be observed from the foregoing statement that the three last-mentioned diseases are remarkably prevalent and fatal. Typhoid fever is confined to no particular locality, while out of fourteen cases of remittent, intermittent and typho-malarial fevers, six occurred in the Twelfth Ward, five in the Twenty-second Ward, two in the Twentieth Ward, and one in the Sixteenth Ward. These figures illustrate forcibly the influence of defective drainage in the production of miasmatic fevers. The mortality of phthisis pulmonalis rose from 65 to 82, and that of the local respiratory affections from 40 to 41, of which pneumonia caused 18. Puerperal disorders carried off 4 women. The deaths by Bright's disease amounted to 25, against 8 in the previous week; 104 deaths occurred in hospitals and other institutions; 54 were certified by Coroners, of which 5 were suicidal and 31 the result of accident or negligence. There died 307 children under five years old, or 48 per cent. of the total mortality, and 39 persons of seventy years old and upward.

The City Sanitary Inspector reports the slaughter-houses of the City as being in a fair sanitary condition. The Captain of the Sanitary Company of Police reports the following as the amount of meat, fish, &c., seized and condemned as unfit for human food: Sheep, 36; horse, 25; veal, "carcass," 4; veal, "bob," 3; lambs, 6; beef, 2,772 pounds; mutton, 90 pounds; veal, 120 pounds; corned beef, 50 pounds; poultry, 471 pounds: fish, 2,850 pounds.

Efforts of the Railroads to Obtain Subsidies—Progress of the Matter.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 17.—The Board of Supervisors have "passed to print" (the first stage of favorable action) an order to submit to a vote of the people the proposition to grant a subsidy of $2,500,000 to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, of $10,000,000 to the San Francisco and Colorado Railroad Company, and smaller subsidies to the North Pacific and the Santa Cruz Railroads.

The Board indefinitely postponed consideration of the order allowing the people to vote a subscription of $10,000,000 to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad in return for preferred stock, notwithstanding a majority of voters had petitioned for it in competition with the Colorado scheme.

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 18—P. M.

Today is the Twenty-first Anniversary of the establishment of the NEW-YORK TIMES. The paper was founded on the 18th September, 1851, and the same reporter has directed its Financial columns ever since (or within a few days of) its first issue. It has certainly been a most eventful Twenty-one Years' history of Wall-street, and we are scarcely less impressed today by the mercurial temper and sudden and wild fluctuations of the Street, not to say its inconsistencies and eccentricities, than the day we penned our first report in the Fall of 1851. Indeed, the events of yesterday and the reaction today are well calculated to remind one of the panics and reactions in the past score of years, beginning with the panic of 1854, following the New-York and New-Haven frauds of Schuyler, to which succeeded the great revulsion of 1857, then the War panics of November, 1860, and July, 1861, following the mad threats of South Carolina to divide the Union, and the Battle of Bull Run; then the Gold and Greenback panics of April and June, 1864, on the Morse speculation and the delay of our victories before Richmond; then the Ketchum panic of August, 1865; then the revulsion in England in May, 1866, succeeded by a rise of 30 ₱ cent. in Gold on this side, and above all, the Black Friday of September, 1869, involving immense losses on Gold and Gold contracts and settlements, which came near bankrupting the Street, and a Stock panic that involved untold millions of losses. Since this last notable event we have had the Chicago fire panic of last October, and finally, yesterday's abortive attempt to supplement Black Friday, by the same parties, (wanting only the effrontery of the deceased Fisk, Jr.,) who then suborned the Supreme Court and broke the Gold Exchange Bank—as they could and would break it a second time today, if it answered their present purpose—to escape the summary penalties of the boldest conspiracy in the financial records of the country.

The eventful markets for Gold, Money and Stocks noticed at length in our report last night, and illustrated by an unexampled official list of sales of Stocks at the Exchange Board, have given place to a better state of things today, although the Street has been in a whirl of excitement throughout the day. The raid upon the Money market, coupled by the same parties with a close and costly corner on Gold, threatened to take a political turn, if preserved in, and it is reasonably certain that if the Treasury had not, today, promptly come to the public relief by disbursing about $3,500,000 for U. S. 5-20s for the Sinking Fund, purchased under sealed proposals at noon, in place of the million of Bonds regularly advertised

SECOND CAMPAIGN SUPPLEMENT.—ADVERTISEMENTS.

 We beg to announce that we shall shortly publish the SECOND CAMPAIGN EDITION of the NEW-YORK TIMES. It will be a paper of great value and interest, containing many articles specially written for it, and a very large collection of SHORT QUOTATIONS from the best letters and speeches which have been published during the canvass. These selections will be pithy and full of point, and must prove of great service to clubs, speakers, and newspapers. They have been prepared with great care, and names and dates are carefully given in every case.

This edition will also contain a categorical refutation of the slanders against Gen. GRANT, an account of GREELEY'S partnership with "Boss" TWEED, a reply to the attacks upon Gen. HARTRANFT, Mr. GREELEY'S letters recommending bad men to office, an exposure of the Oakes Ames slander concocted by C. A. DANA and the managing editor of the Tribune—and GREELEY'S famous letter to Mr. WEED and Mr. SEWARD, with now published for the first time. There will also be some account of

SENATOR FENTON'S CAREER

as a Reformer.

The above is only an outline of the contents of this special supplement—the best campaign paper ever issued, and one which will be indispensable to Republicans throughout the country. Full particulars will be shortly published.

We printed and sold 275,000 copies of the first supplement, and they were circulated in every State of the Union. Of this edition we shall print at least an equal number. In reply to numerous inquiries, we have to state that we can take only ONE COLUMN of advertisements, at three dollars per line.

"'There is no story circulated against the President,' says the TIMES finally, 'which cannot readily be disproved.' Why, then, by way of a beginning, not disprove the statement that he has at divers times received gifts of money and other valuables, and thereafter bestowed office upon the donors of the same?"—New-York World.

Give us the name of any person from whom, as you say, the President has "received gifts of money and other valuables," and thereupon bestowed office upon the donor, and we will instantly disprove the accusation. Do not deal in generalities. Give us names and dates, and we will meet them fairly and above-board.

A letter will be found in another column in which President GRANT, in a characteristically manly and straightforward way, congratulates Gen. DIX upon the manner of his nomination as Republican candidate for Governor of this State. It is emphatically true, as the President puts it, that, "when conventions seek candidates—not candidates nominations," there is good augury for the future of political purity. The President does simple justice to the honest Democrats of New-York in admitting that both political parties have harbored men who have fostered the corruptions of the last eight years in our State and local administration. He is right in assuming that the nomination of Gen. DIX means the success of the principle which carried everything before it in this City last Fall—namely, that reform is the pressing and vital necessity of our State politics, and that all honest men, without distinction of party, should be invited to co-operate in effecting it. Let us hope the suggestion will not be lost sight of.

The Cincinnati Commercial stated the other day that Mr. MURPHY had given $5,000 toward the purchase of a cottage for the President at Long Branch. This was an untruth, fathered by "HALSTEAD & CO." We engaged to prove that it was an untruth, but HALSTEAD & CO. quietly back out. Thus it is with all the Greeleyite slanderers. They start a calumny, and when they are challenged to the proof, sneak off. Can we not induce HALSTEAD to subscribe $5,000 toward our Poor Children's Fund?

"Pseudo-heroic" is the name GREELEY has invented for soldiers who favor the election of Gen. GRANT. "An enormous fraud" is what he calls their Convention. "Fredericksburg without a fight" is the sneer he tosses at Gen. BURNSIDE, than whom no soldier is more honored for his courage, or beloved for his noble character. While Mr. GREELEY'S organ has only these contemptuous terms for Northern soldiers, Mr. GREELEY himself still "feels a just pride in the military character and achievements of Stonewall JACKSON and LEE" as much as in those of GRANT, SHERMAN, and THOMAS.

About a year ago, the Tribune was by no means anxious to have TWEED tried for his robbery of the City Treasury. It employed all its energies about that time in shouting for the trial of the TIMES' editors on half a dozen libel suits, to be brought by the members of the Ring. Now, the Tribune is in such a hurry to have TWEED tried that it insults Attorney-General BARLOW by suggesting that he is in league with the "Boss" thief, and is rather doubtful whether WHEELER H. PECKHAM knows what he is talking about when he says that the Ring suits are to come up in October. It does not tend to increase public confidence in the sincerity of the Tribune whine to find that the names of SWEENY and HALL are studiously omitted in clamoring for the trial of TWEED. It is quite obvious that the "organ" does not fall foul of TWEED because he is a thief, but because, in its own words:

"Just before the late great Greeley meeting in Union-square he wrote to many of his personal and political friends, urging them to take no part in the meeting, and to keep their friends from attending it, and expressing the hope that it would prove a failure."

This was really too bad of TWEED, and looks too much like going back on his quondam partner in the tobacco business. Let the Tribune be comforted, however—there were plenty of scalawags at Union-square without the reinforcement which TWEED might have sent. The EX-BOSS really deserves the gratitude of the organ in helping to improve the respectability of the crowd. At the same time, TWEED is quite right in complaining of the way he is treated by the Tribune. His friendship for Mr. GREELEY, and the way in which the organ used to talk about him, really warranted him in expecting better things from that quarter.

"Mr. OAKES AMES denies. Nothing is more natural." So says the Professor. A man is accused of a base offense, and denies it, whereupon his accuser turns round to the audience, and produces the denial as a proof of the man's guilt. This is justice—and "journalism," according to the only living authority upon the subject. The Evening Post—managed by experienced and clever hands—has been adjudged by the Professor to be "totally ignorant of journalism," and densely stupid, so that we are reduced to the Professor himself for instruction in the art. Who would not be proud of belonging to a calling of which a wanton libeler is at the head?

Mr. GREELEY'S private and personal organ demands that Capt. KENNEDY, of the Sixth Police Precinct, should be "transferred or broken," because the said wicked KENNEDY has declared himself in favor of Gen. GRANT. Does not this little fact throw a very clear light upon GREELEY'S secret ideas on the subject of civil service reform?

Harper's comes out this week with two remarkably fine cartoons by NAST. The double-page picture, entitled "the key-note of the campaign," is perhaps superior in point of elaboration and careful grouping to anything which has yet been produced by the great American caricaturist. A more perfect gallery of portraits could not be arranged than that of the motley crowd of office-seekers, who are represented as starting their unmelodious howl for GREELEY. Face, expression, and pose are equally characteristic and unmistakable among all the forty or so of Greeleyite backers to whom Herr SCHURZ is giving the "key-note of the campaign." The clever front-page cartoon is full of suggestiveness and force. There is evidently a pretty high wind blowing; but it does not disturb the outstretched form of that dead rooster that lies over the fatal record of North Carolina, Vermont, and Maine. President GRANT stands good-humoredly, ready to clasp hands over this "bloody chasm." B. G. don't appear to see it.

Slander as a Trade.

When the Greeleyite journals have been busily engaged for some weeks in the concoction of calumnies against all our public men who support the Republican Party and its candidates, and when their falsehoods have been knocked to pieces one after the other, they generally put on a pious air, and protest against the use of "personalities" in the canvass. When the history of the canvass comes to be written, it will be found that the organs of Mr. GREELEY have deliberately proceeded from the outset upon the theory that they must win the day for their candidate, if at all, by destroying the characters of the men opposed to him. To do this, it was necessary to resort to invention, since there were no good grounds for attacks of the kind described. The chief share in the work of constructing libels naturally fell to C. A. DANA, of the Sun, who has grown old and vicious in the art; and by his side stood a little group of unscrupulous men, like SAMUEL BOWLES of Springfield, who were only too glad to assist in the propagation of a scandal against any prominent member of the party which they have pronounced to be dead.

Hence we have seen Gen. GRANT and his wife and children exposed to every form of unmanly and cowardly attack; while all his supporters are treated as if they were felons. These tactics, whatever A. OAKEY HALL may say in his Ujiji Herald, have been confined to one side. We have been driven, most reluctantly, to address ourselves to the disagreeable task of rebutting slanders—but we shall be much obliged to anybody who will point out a single false accusation which has appeared in these columns against any public man. What we have charged against SCHURZ, TRUMBULL, DOOLITTLE and others we have fully proved, or stand ready to prove at any moment. Look at the case on the other side.

C. A. DANA applied to President JOHNSON, and again to President GRANT, for the post of Collector of this Port. He was refused, and very properly, and on the occasion of his second rebuff, he became a determined, though impotent, enemy of the President—impotent because he had attacked pretty nearly every respectable man in the community, and had signalized himself only by defending JAMES FISK, Jr., the Tammany Ring, Judge BARNARD, and men of that stamp. To be a rogue was the sure passport to DANA'S favor—to be an honest man, and to resist black-mailing, was the sure way to make him an enemy. Well, he at once set to work libeling the President, and BOWLES and GREELEY'S successor carefully gathered up his slanders. Thus the Murphy cottage falsehood, the abominable charges of intemperance and dishonesty against the President, (repeated by BOWLES,) the "Oakes Ames" slander, the Galena land calumny—these and many others were started by the Greeley gang, disproved, and yet repeated. Now what we want to ask is simply this—will there never come a time when the public can be trusted to reject such slanders as these, without newspapers and innocent men being put to the trouble of disproving them?

"Certainly," say some, "why answer them at all?" The answer is simply because, if they are not answered, you who advise us not to answer are the very first to believe the lies. The Oakes-Ames slander was furbished up by DANA, and that fact alone ought to have been sufficient to discredit it. Then BOWLES—"our SAMUEL"—and the New-York Tribune, and the minor Democratic organ here, and other Greeley papers took it up, and at last some people began to believe in it. So the gentlemen implicated, and OAKES AMES himself, came out and specifically denied it. Now, ought not all this be sufficient to lead people to reject the next libel invented by DANA, BOWLES, REID & Co.? There will be one placed upon the market in the course of the next few days. It may be leveled at the President, or some one of his supporters—but, depend upon it, DANA & Co. are hard at work forging it now. DANA has within the past few days been proved to have fabricated a slander, and put it in the mouth of a dead man, the late Secretary STANTON—the act of a miserable coward as well as of a libeler. Will the public, then, continue to credit the forgeries which proceed from GREELEY'S Tribune and DANA'S Sun? If they do, we must continue to expose those forgeries and slanders, but we should very much like to feel that it is not necessary to fill our columns or to occupy our readers' time, with this sort of work.

Cricket.

The cricket-match which is now being played at Hoboken, between eleven gentlemen of England, and the St. George Club of this City, may perhaps serve to convince some people of the great merits and fascination of the most noble and manly field-game ever invented. Comparisons are "odorous," and it would be idle to draw any comparisons between base-ball and cricket, because they are games of a totally different character, while each is good in its way. Several first-rate American base-ball players were in the field yesterday against the English eleven, and prettier "fielding" than they exhibited it would be hard to find. They pounced down upon the flying ball, as a hen picks up barley, and never lost a chance which came in their way. The good base-ball player can be detected half a mile off by the neat, clean way in which he handles the ball, and the quickness with which he returns it. But, when we learn that twenty-two good average players were put out for sixty-six runs, and that two men on the opposite side made 102 runs, without being put out—it is obvious that the skill at the game is not equally proportioned, and that our cricketers here have a great deal to learn.

Even in this match, they will do better than they have done so far. The twenty-two—English and American—went in first, and were no doubt nervous, for it is no joke to stand up against the bowling of men who have a reputation for being invincible. They were probably a little afraid of the ball, and if two good "blockers" had been able to make a stand for half an hour or so, early in the day, it would have immensely encouraged the others. When they next go in, two of them should make up their minds to stick, without troubling themselves at first about making runs. But it must be remembered that young men here, whether cricketers or base-ball players, have very little time for practice, whereas the eleven to whom they are opposed play very frequently, and always against a strong force. Some of the gentlemen from England are very young—the dashing player, GRACE, is only twenty-four—but their physical powers are in the most glorious state of perfection, and they only know by hearsay what indigestion or nervousness means. Eye, hand, and nerve are as steady with them as if they moved by clock-work. Most of them are still at college, and yet they can beat easily any amateur club of double their number which can be brought against them, with several professionals thrown in. The coolness, steadiness, and pluck which they display is well worth a journey to Hoboken to witness.

This brings us to the point concerning which we desired to call attention now—and it is the desirability of inducing our young men to go in more extensively than they are in the habit of doing for field sports. The really "good" young man is, in our days, so occupied with business that he rarely gives himself time for proper relaxation; and hence we see gray heads at thirty, and broken frames at the very period of life when men ought to be most vigorous. The battle for success is very hard and trying, and physical strength too often breaks down under its stress. A game at cricket or base-ball would not increase this pressure, but rather be a relief to it. We advise all who wish to form a fair opinion of cricket as a pastime, to go to Hoboken today and see the continuation of the match. The New-York club deserve great credit for their enterprise and courage in tackling the redoubtable English eleven. Yesterday they played very well indeed, but with bad luck. It will not be construed into any discourtesy toward our visitors if we say that we hope the luck will change this morning.

The Fashions.

Saratoga and Long Branch have almost entirely subsided into their usual Winter's sleep. The fashionable world of New-York is fast settling down again amid its native bricks and brown stone. The question of the Fall and Winter fashions is becoming an interesting one to the ladies. A multitude of technical terms, as unintelligible to the father of a family as a sea-captain's orders are to an ordinary landsman, glide over the tongues of wives and daughters, not unmixed with an arithmetical phraseology which the said father of a family finds much less difficulty in understanding.

There are few things which have furnished more ample material for ridicule than the arbitrary changes of fashion. They have been a favorite theme of satirists for centuries. The practice of regularly throwing away, every season, valuable clothing which is still in perfectly good order, for the purpose of substituting articles which are neither handsomer, more comfortable, nor in any way superior, is one which is too obviously absurd to be unnoticed by those who desire a suggestive topic for humor and sarcasm. The principal drawback to this kind of wit is that however pointed it may be, it fails to do justice to the subject. But intrinsically ridiculous as the practice in question is, it has the sanction of all enlightened modern nations, and constitutes one of the most invariable accompaniments to the progress of civilization.

But, although this tyranny is so wide-spread and has continued so long, there are some signs of a formidable revolt against it. This is especially true of the rougher sex. A well-dressed gentleman in these days assumes a degree of liberty in regard to his apparel which no one who aspired to the character of a well-dressed gentleman fifty, or even twenty-five years ago, would have dared to claim. A similar change has, to some degree, taken place with the ladies, though it is not without some hesitation that we make this latter assertion. We did not think of the chignon when we began the sentence. Still, chignon and all, we believe the statement to be true. With all the unreasonable dictates to which a lady who does not wish to be entirely out of the fashion must submit, such a lady can, at the present day, dress more as she pleases than she ever could before. There was an exactness and stringency in the rules of costume in former years which have been very much relaxed, and in regard to which the tendency is toward still further modification.

A great deal is said about the extravagance of the times. We do not see that people are any more extravagant now than they always were. They spend more, but that is because they have more to spend. There is no evidence that there is a greater proportion of persons now whose expenditures are beyond their means, than there was in the days when ladies wore shoes with soles scarcely thicker than a visiting card, and bonnets the size of a half-bushel measure. But while there is no more extravagance, there is in many things, and fashionable dressing among them, much more waste, both of money and time. And here, we think, is a great evil. Not to speak of the amount of money which might be more profitably employed, we have too high an opinion of the mental powers of the female sex to believe that the most advantageous way in which an educated lady can exercise her intellect is in thinking and talking about what she is to wear.

But as so much time and money are spent in dress, we wish that the dictators of the fashions, and especially female fashions, would try to make them a little less ugly. A gentleman's dress at the present day is not handsome or graceful; but it has at any rate the merit of not giving the wearer an appearance of deformity. But if an individual who had lived in some remote corner of the world, where he had never seen anything of the present style of female apparel, should suddenly be brought into the presence of three or four fashionable ladies, nothing could exceed his horror and commiseration at the frightful and unheard-of manner in which they would appear to him to have been afflicted. Perhaps there is some philosophy in the style, after all, for we half believe it to be a deliberate device on the part of woman—lovely woman—to try her power over the other sex by seeing into how unsightly a disguise she can put herself, and still be reverenced and admired. If this be the object, we can only say that the self-denying means by which it is sought to be accomplished deserve the highest praise, and that words cannot express our appreciation of the ingenuity and efficiency of the test.

Precept and Practice.

Less than two years ago, HORACE GREELEY, either overconfident in his own virtue, or aspiring to a virtue he knew he did not possess, wrote as follows. It appears in the Tribune of Nov. 29, 1870:

"The Cincinnati Commercial will be good enough to inform its readers that there is no office in the universe that would be any inducement to HORACE GREELEY to forego or postpone his advocacy of protection to home industry."

What is now the position of HORACE GREELEY? Has he not only deliberately consented to "forego or postpone his advocacy of protection to home industry," but is he not supporting and helping to elect avowed free-traders to Congress? Mr. GREELEY approved beforehand, if he did not prepare, that portion of the Cincinnati platform which says: "Recognizing that there are in our midst honest but irreconcilable differences of opinion with regard to the respective systems of protection and free trade, we remit the discussion of the subject to the people in their Congress districts and to the decision of Congress thereon, wholly free of Executive interference or dictation." In his letter accepting the nomination, Mr. GREELEY says that he understands this to mean "that the raising of revenue, whether by tariff or otherwise, shall be recognized and treated as the people's immediate business, to be shaped and directed by them through their Representatives in Congress, whose action thereon the President must neither overrule by his acts, attempt to dictate, nor presume to punish, by bestowing office only on those who agree with him or withdrawing it from those who do not," and he pledges himself to pursue this course. Does not HORACE GREELEY, in hopes of the Presidency, "forego or postpone," yes abandon, "his advocacy of protection to home industry?"

But more than this. Mr. GREELEY actively supports—if he keeps faith—S. S. COX for Congressman at large from this State, and yet Mr. COX is a life-long avowed free-trader. He has shown it by his acts in Congress, and by his speeches in and out of Congress. For instance, we find by the Tribune that in a speech delivered at what it calls "the Free Trade Feed," in November, 1870, Mr. COX said:

"I honored free trade in 1846. * * I was never ashamed of the word free trade. * * I am a free-trader under the Constitution. If anybody wants to make anything out of that phrase they may. * * I like the words free trade. I have fought a great deal for it. * * *. You gentlemen of the Press that have spoken here to-night so nobly, you have fought a great fight in the body of your own party. We rejoice in it and will clasp hands in rivalry, in noble emulation, if you will bring your party up to the standard of free trade. If you will do this with your party we will do the same with ours. Gentlemen, Republicans, if you cannot bring your party up to the idea of free trade won't you come over and help us?"

He boasted in the same speech that in that issue he had "mastered HORACE" in the campaign which had just closed. Even his brazen audacity hardly contemplated the possibility that he had so far "mastered HORACE" that the latter would, in less than two years, support his election to represent the whole State of New-York in Congress.

Was not HORACE GREELEY right when he said, "The White House gad-fly crazes when it stings?"

A Warlike Magistrate.

Judicial dignity is not, we regret to say, a quality found in our Court-rooms so uniformly as could be desired. The most uncompromising patriotism must admit that the manners of the late Justice BARNARD on the bench were hardly such as one would look for in the ideal magistrate. And there are still many excellent members of the American Judiciary, not to be compared for a moment in point of learning or integrity with that Judge, who yet dispense an unimpeachable quality of law and justice in an off-hand fashion rather startling to Old World observers. To be sure, it is only in the remote West that the Court ever adjourns itself to look at a passing circus or thrash an irreverent counsel; but even nearer home, it may be admitted that judical proceedings often lack a proper degree of solemnity and decorum. It may fairly be doubted, however, if in any Court-room this side of the Rocky Mountains, such a scene would be possible as lately edified the good people of Norwich, in England. This was no less than a rough and tumble fight between two Magistrates in the Court-room.

These two worthy Solons, named respectively Mr. BLAKE and Capt. BRIGNOLA, had some difference of opinion at the opening of the Court, which the good Captain thought he could settle most satisfactorily by declaring aloud to his colleagues his settled conviction that Mr. BLAKE was "a foolish old man." This disparagement to his wisdom the offended gentleman seemed to rate as little in comparison with the fling at his years, for, "placing himself at once in a defiant attitude," he dared his traducer to "come on," and boldly asserted that, "old as he was, the Captain dared not walk out of the room and tell him he was a foolish old man." To this alluring, and withal reasonable proposition, which it might be supposed a gentleman of martial title would eagerly jump at, the Captain contented himself by reiterating his unflattering disbelief in Mr. BLAKE'S sagacity or youth. The Mayor, who was presiding, at this point deemed it his duty to interfere, which he did by mildly but vainly requesting the irate BLAKE to sit down. In this appeal a portion of the audience vociferously joined, while another part as energetically urged upon him that it was his plain magisterial duty to "hit him." Upon this hint, Mr. BLAKE eventually acted, and with many contumelious observations, smote the poor Captain sorely, and the battle began. The benches and chairs which were in the way were obligingly "removed" by the Court-room officer, whether to save them or the combatants, or to give an uninterrupted view to the spectators, we are not told. The struggle was terrific, but brief, Mr. BLAKE speedily making good at least half of his proud boast, uttered at the commencement of hostilities, "that neither mentally nor physically was the Captain his superior." Seizing his luckless antagonist as Achilles might have seized some second-rate Trojan hero, "he flung him with considerable violence against the partition." Like a good General he followed up this initial advantage with such promptness that "Mr. BRIGNOLA seems to have been placed entirely in the hands of his antagonist," and there is no telling what dreadful scenes might not have ensued had not Mr. BOLINGBROKE, at that moment, moved by the desperate condition of the hapless BRIGNOLA, rushed to the rescue, and ejaculating: "Don't, BLAKE! Don't, BLAKE!" caught hold of the skirts of that gentleman.

But the champion once having tasted the delights of battle, was not easily torn from his prey, and when some other person from the audience desired to effect a separation, the indignant BLAKE was for immolating him on the spot. "What do you here?" he cried sternly, "and offered him a blow." With Mr. BOLINGBROKE tugging at his coat-tails, however, and Mr. BRIGNOLA strenuously endeavoring to get away, the combat could not be maintained with advantage, and the fiery BLAKE reluctantly stayed his hand. "The members of the Bench present," we are told, "witnessed the scene with evident consternation, surprise, and regret." Which may be readily believed.

The great Swedish Chancellor bade his son go and see with how little wisdom the world is governed. It seems to take little wisdom to make a magistrate, sometimes, in England.

MINOR TOPICS.

The turn which was given yesterday to the preliminary examination of FORRESTER, was, to say the least of it, highly dramatic. Since "ANDY" GARVEY was suddenly produced to confront Mayor HALL, the criminal records of the City have furnished no such surprise as the appearance of Miss KEENAN as a witness against the supposed murderer of Mr. NATHAN. Perhaps the most surprising thing about it all is that both the Police and the witness should have been able, for two years, to hold their tongue about this unsuspected resource of the prosecution. Whatever may be the result of FORRESTER'S trial, it is quite clear that it will take rank among the causes célèbres.

That the sham fighting by which, two or three times a year, the British Army strives to lay the dreadful spectre of Dorking is very different from the real article, no one needs to be told. But the Autumn manœuvres have given an instance of the fact more than ordinarily ludicrous. The advance of the Northern Army under Lord MARK KERR was stopped, and the entire division held for some time in check, by what does the reader suppose? A swarm of wasps. These winged warriors, disturbed in their peaceful occupancy of a barley-field, charged fiercely upon the invading foe. The Commander-in-Chief was sorely wounded in seven places—not named. A flank movement was frustrated by the active assailants, and the rout of the division seemed imminent, when a forlorn hope succeeded, under cover of a heavy bombardment of turf, in shutting up the enemy in their fastness, and the Northern Army was saved. In palliation of this undignified and altogether laughable discomfiture of Lord KERR'S veterans, it may be said that a swarm of wasps is a foe not to be despised. They will readily sting a man to death. Only a few days since a child was so killed, almost instantly, at a place called Chevenges, in France; and even soldiers, only playing at war, may be excused for shunning so unpleasant an insect. But does not the incident suggest its own moral? Why should not this fierceness be utilized in the service of patriotism? A regiment or two of wasps trained to act as skirmishers would give a most unwelcome reception to the future invader.

Should there ever arrive a time when the New-York ruffian is habitually brought in close contact with the gallows which he is so eminently fitted to adorn, he need not abandon himself to grief. There is a happy land to rest, the Republic of Colombia, where the rights and privileges of the murderer are expressly guaranteed to him in the Constitution. He is not only made secure against the possibility of being legally hung, but Courts are forbidden to sentence him, or any other malfactor, to imprisonment for a longer period than ten years. Peru has lately adopted the same provisions, so that in case New-York should ever become an unhealthy residence for "Reddy" and his kind, they may betake themselves either to Colombia or Peru, and there immolate unoffending persons, at the comparatively cheap rate of ten years' imprisonment for each slaughter. Why these two Republics should have extended this leniency to criminals is not clear, but one cannot help suspecting that the Colombian and Peruvian statesmen, recognising the uncertainty of revolutions, have sought to provide for their own safety when their rivals have mounted to power.

It is impossible not to admire the law which compels steamers to provide steam-pumps, life-preservers, and all sorts of nice things to insure the comfort of passengers in case of disaster. Having such a law ready for our admiration, it would be ungrateful to find fault with the steam-pumps and life-preservers themselves. Yet one cannot help noting that when the Bienville took fire, the steam-pump would not work, and that when the Metis foundered, the life-preservers, owing to the weakness of their fastenings, were, to a great extent, unserviceable. However, it is undeniable that on both steamers there were steam-pumps and life-preservers, and it might be said that every person who believed that there was a probability that these life-saving provisions would be called in use, had better stay on shore, and not attempt to satisfy his curiosity as to their efficiency. There will always be those whom it is next to impossible to please, and steam-boat men must expect to be maligned by peevish persons who take exception to worthless life-preservers, useless steam-pumps, and water-tight compartments, through which large holes have been cut.

Our street Arabs, we sometimes flatter ourselves are as bad as any in the world. But, according to a correspondent of the London Telegraph, they might take lessons in wickedness from their fellows of Berlin. These young ruffians, in age ranging from ten to twenty, are called "Banzel," and their chief amusement consists of stoning foreigners. But a lady on horseback is their special and most delightful prey, since she is almost sure to be a stranger. Many riders have, as a consequence, been frequently thrown and run away with, thanks to the efforts of the worthy "Banzel," that a female equestrian is said to be as rare a sight in Berlin as some years ago it was in New-York. The "Banzel" resemble our own street Bedouins in enjoying almost perfect immunity for their ruffianly pastimes, since "the police are afraid to meddle with them, as they gather in hordes with magical rapidity when any of them get into a scrape, and will pull a man down and trample upon or kick him unmercifully until he becomes insensible." The Berliners, however, are in one respect, luckier than we, for their "Banzel" go into the army at last, and get plenty of rough usage to tame down their vivacity; while our juvenile scamps graduate into burglars and highwaymen; or, quite as bad as either, professional ruffians like "Reddy the Blacksmith,"—unless the Children's Aid Society steps in and reforms them.

The World is at its old tricks of stabbing the candidates it pretends to support. It published on Tuesday an elaborate attack upon the National Election law and its enforcement. It said:

"Federal interference with the elections is unjustifiable under any circumstances. It is a flagrant usurpation of power, which has no warrant in the Constitution. It is the most monstrous stride toward centralization which has ever been taken, even by this reckless, unblushing Administration. If the Federal authority can interpose between the State Governments and the voters and bring the whole Federal power to influence and control the elections, the Imperialists can dictate who shall be chosen, and universal suffrage will be as insulting a mockery as it was in France under LOUIS NAPOLEON."

But the World's candidate for the Presidency has been the pre-eminent champion of this "flagrant usurpation of power," this "most monstrous stride toward centralization." Mr. GREELEY said, on Oct. 6, 1871: "Mr. GREELEY urged the passage of the act in question [referring to the Election law] before Gen. GRANT did, and has justified such instrument much oftener and more zealously than the President or almost any one else," and a list of nearly twenty articles on the subject shows this boast to be true. If the World really believes that the Election law is what it claims it to be, how can it even pretend to support for President the man who glories in having urged and justified its passage?

INDIANA.

Democratic Preparations for Ballot Frauds—Large Republican Meetings—The Straight Democratic State Convention.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 18.—The canvass becomes more exciting as election day approaches, and active as both parties have been for some weeks, both are now straining every nerve. This is especially true of the Democrats, who, for some reason yet unknown, have plucked up spirit in the last day or two, and profess to be confident that they will carry the State by a large majority. As there is nothing in a legitimate way to give any ground for such an assertion, it is believed this confidence is based upon the completion of arrangements for the importation of Kentucky confederates in sufficient numbers to decide the result. In support of this view is a publication today by the Sentinel of a great mass of stuff purporting to be the confessions by Republicans of how their party committed a fraud on the ballot in a former election, but none of the names of the pretended witnesses are given, and the whole thing is considered to be merely a cover for contemplated Democratic frauds. The Republicans, however, entertain little fears of the success of these rascalities, as the whole State is closely watched, and bogus votes cannot appear in most of the school districts without being spotted. In some counties where there is a heavy Democratic majority, these frauds may be committed; but not in such volume as to endanger the result. The Democrats are also legitimately more active than they were, and have now gone to work with vigor, which shows they intend to make a desperate effort to regain the field they have already lost. Hendricks is announced for a speech every day to the election. His appointments include most of the prominent places in the State. Gratz Brown is announced to make several speeches during the last week of the canvass, and some of the more sanguine Democrats expect to derive some good from his harangues. Greeley himself is to make speeches here, and probably elsewhere in the State. All the Democratic candidates for Congress and the State offices are also engaged, as well as such inanimate Reformers as he who is persistently announced as Gov. Austin Blair, of Michigan, whereby it is hoped to deceive some people into supposing he is Governor of that State and a man of consequence. Gov. Walker, of Virginia, is another of the apostles of purity in government, who has been imported, and is announced to make a speech today at Logansport. The Republicans have no apprehensions concerning this Democratic activity, and continue their energetic campaign. Arrangements have been made to make it even more active now during its last days. Hon. John A. Bingham, of Ohio; Gen. Hawley, Gen. Jewell, of Connecticut; Gen. Butler, of Massachusetts; Gen. Woodford, of New-York, with other distinguished orators from abroad, will soon be here to reinforce the speakers in the field, and Senator Wilson is to return and make a speech at Evansville and another at Terre Haute. Today large meetings have been held and addressed as follows: Charlestown, by Gen. Brown and Col. Black; Clinton, by Senator Pratt and Col. R. R. Short; Bloomington, by Hon. Jason B. Brown; Sand Run, by Gen. James A. Hall, of Maine; Valparaiso, by Hon. Wm. Williams; Elkhart, by Hon. Godlove S. Orth; Pine Village, by Hon. Will Cumback; Waveland, by Hon. D. E. Williamson; Winamac, by Hon. L. Sexton; Verary, by Hon. W. W. Curry and Gen. Lew. Wallace, in Grant County.

The principal event of the day has been a large public meeting at the Academy of Music, in this place. Senator Morton was the speaker, and made, perhaps, the most powerful address of his life, which produced a profound impression on a large audience present. Arrangements are in progress to wind up the campaign with two monster mass-meetings. The first of these will occur at Warsaw, on Thursday, 26th, when 40,000 people are expected to be present. The exercises will continue during the whole day. Adresses will be delivered by Gen. Logan, Gen. Hawley, Gen. Woodford, besides most of the eminent Indianians. The next monster meeting will be a grand State rally in this city, on Thursday, Oct. 3, when multitudes from every portion of the State will be present. Among the speakers who will certainly be present are Gen. Butler, Secretary Boutwell, Hon. Benj. Wade, Gov. Jewell, Senator Carpenter and Senator Morton. Special rates have been arranged with all the railroads concentrating here, and tens of thousands will be here from every portion of the Commonwealth, and the occasion promises to be one of the most notable political events in the history of the State. The Convention of Straight Democrats meets here to-morrow, and judging from the sentiments of the delegates who have arrived, it will have an important influence on the contest. Nearly all the "Straights" are in favor of the nomination of a full State ticket, and one will probably be put in the field, notwithstanding the opposition of Ex-Senator Fitch. The nominee for Governor will probably be Hon. A. P. Edgerton, who got such a large vote in the Louisville Convention for Vice-President. Dr. Sherrod and W. C. Moreau are mentioned for Congressmen at large, and the electoral ticket will be headed by Hon. G. N. Fitch and C. H. Reeve. A mass-meeting of "Straights" will be held in the evening after the Convention, when these most prominent in the movement will make speeches in justification of their course.

Congressman Hale's Apt Quotation.

The Republicans of Calais, Me., held a great jubilee a few nights ago, and during the evening sent a telegram to Hon. Eugene Hale, congratulating him upon his triumphant re-election to Congress. Not long after they received a reply, saying: "Your dispatch received. I send greeting to Calais. 'I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience; and how thou canst not bear them that are evil; and thou hast tried them which say they are Apostles and are not, and hast found them liars.'"

ANOTHER GREAT RALLY

Immense Gathering at Cooper Institute Last Night.

Unqualified Indorsement of the Republican Nominations.

The Confessions of Disgusted Liberals and Democrats.

Speeches by Hon. Lyman Tremain, Ex-Gov. Salomon and Others.

The second of the weekly meetings given under the auspices of the Republican State Committee, at the Cooper Institute, was a success in every respect. The audience was composed of the representative citizens of New-York. Before the doors were opened the sidewalks in front of each entrance were thronged with people eager to get good seats. When the doors were opened such a rush was made toward the large hall that the clattering feet sounded like approaching peals of thunder. Every seat and the aisles were full. A noticeable feature about this meeting is that the Republicans find the interest in the campaign sufficient to draw good houses without the Democratic auxiliaries of rockets, Chinese lanterns, and other sensational clap-trap. The attendants on these meetings have hearty inducements in the hope of Gen. Grant's re-election without any artificial accessories. Business men brought their families to pass the evening in listening to the discussion of their most interesting topics. The gathering at the Cooper Institute last night was as much above that at Tammany and Irving Halls last week as gentility is above boorishness. It was very evident that intellect predominated in the Cooper Institute audience, and that each person present had the capacity of thinking for himself. On the platform, which was handsomely draped with American flags, were Hon. Messrs. Laflin, Hugh Gardner, Peter Burns of Syracuse, Edgar Ketchum, John Morrison, Henry Clews, Cornell, and a great number of those on the list of Vice-Presidents.

On the appearance of Gov. Salomon and Hon. Lyman Tremain they were greeted with a stirring burst of applause. Mr. Cornell, before introducing the speaker, announced that the next meeting will be held in the Cooper Institute next Wednesday evening, and the orators will be Hon. Edwards Pierrepont and Frederick Douglass. He then proposed as Chairman Ex-Gov. Salomon, of Wisconsin, on whom, during the dark days of the war, Mr. Lincoln leant with confidence. Gov. Salomon was unanimously elected to preside, and, coming forward, spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF GOV. SALOMON.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: As the day approaches when the people of this land are called upon to choose one of their number as their chief executive officer for the next four years, we find men all over the country declaring their preference for the one or the other of the two candidates. However much some may deplore the fact, the people have practically only the choice between Gen. Grant, [applause,] and Mr. Greeley. [Hisses.] Grant as the representative of the Republican Party, and Greeley as the joint candidate of the Democracy and the so-called Liberal Republicans. When that alternative was presented, I for one have had no doubt that it was my duty to support Gen. Grant's re-election in preference to the election of Mr. Greeley. Together with many others who for years have been consistent and earnest supporters of Republican men and measures, I have recognized and do yet recognize the necessity of reform and change in some things which have been done or suffered in the name and under the sanction of the Republican Party and of our present Administration, and hence I sympathized with the political movement of independent men of our party which culminated in the Cincinnati Convention. I believed then, and I believe now, that our system of party caucuses and conventions which enable the will and will of the people, and too often subjects them to the rule of demagogues and designing professional politicians, has become an evil, and I hoped to see the foundation laid at that Cincinnati Convention of a thorough reform and regeneration in that and other respects. Calm deliberation, thoughtful, honest, independent and patriotic action, freedom from the dishonest tricks, cunning devices, and bartering proclivities so often apparent in political conventions, an earnest devotion to the principles embraced in the call should have characterized this Convention, and its candidates should have been nominated by statesmen who, eminently, heartily and honestly in sympathy with the principles of the call, were sought after, and not seekers for the nomination. No doubt the originators of that movement had high and noble aims, but their lofty aspirations were brought down by their cunning and devices against which they sought to protect. Like vultures upon the prey, a certain class of professional politicians, experienced in the high art of political jugglery by which conventions are made and caspared, and the honest voice of the people is stifled, descended upon this Convention; they packed it and, after secretly striking this bargain, they carried out their schemes with a rapidity and dexterity that their poor victims stood aghast, and scarcely realized their utter defeat when the trick was accomplished and the deed was done. The scheme of forcing Mr. Greeley, as the Presidential candidate, upon this Convention, was dishonest in its very conception. One of the principal points of the reforms sought at Cincinnati was the reduction of the taxes by a revenue basis and the abrogation of the principle of protection to home industry. Mr. Greeley, however, has been and is prominent as the most persistent and ultra-protectionist in the country, the most bitter opponent of that "revenue reform" sought after and nourished by the originators of the movement. Then again, until quite recently before the Convention, Mr. Greeley had not at all been in sympathy with this "Liberal Republican" movement. When that movement first originated in Missouri he had nothing but bitter enmity and denunciation from Mr. Greeley's the Tribune, and only when the possibility loomed up before him and his friends of being landed in the White House at Washington upon this "Liberal" wave, did he and they embark upon it. The result of that Convention was the most stupendous parody upon the very reforms which were sought by it. It was called as a protest against the supposed undue influence of the office-holding politicians who, it was alleged, controlled the Republican organization, and it was itself absolutely controlled by a combination of notorious and unscrupulous office-seeking politicians. The very element which throughout the entire Winter had been secretly and diligently scheming to defeat the necessary reform legislation for our City, embarked for Cincinnati, and there, by hook and by crook, foisted upon that Convention as its candidate a man whose past political career, in the main, is of the bitterest and vehement opposition to the most vital principle for the realization of which the Convention had been called. Shocking as this action was, however, it was but the beginning of the scheming, bargaining, trading, and political debauchment, which followed in its train. Characteristic were the words with which the Tribune at that time boldly announced what was to follow the Cincinnati Convention: "And now for Baltimore!" The cynic disregard of all principle displayed in these few words furnished a good commentary on the manner in which Mr. Greeley's nomination had been forced at Cincinnati, and would be forced also upon the Baltimore Convention. Henceforth the cry of "anything to beat Grant," became the syren's song with which the Democracy was easily caught. Mr. Greeley's friends "went for Baltimore," and he, the life-long, implacable enemy of American Democracy, became its chosen champion. [Applause and laughter.]

It is idle to claim that with this act the Democratic Party has ceased to exist. True, it has stultified its record. It has lost many of its consistent adherents, but its organization is as intact as it ever was, and if Mr. Greeley is elected President, the Democratic Party will once more control the destinies of the country. As a party they have nominated him; as a party they will claim, and will receive, their share of the power for which they have shamefully striven for so many years. And Mr. Greeley would be the last man to refuse to recognize the claims of those who raise the White House over his head. We have his own word for it, that he will not kick them out when he gets there. And that is the great reform movement that we are invited to support! Perhaps it is easier for the people of this City and State than the people elsewhere to perceive the dangerous character of this combination which seeks to ride into power in the Federal Government under this sham cry for reform. Tammany Democracy and Tammany Republicanism are too well known here to deceive the people, although they attempt to hide their character over so much. They are the chief support of this sham reform here, and no number of white hats and white coats and smiling, benevolent faces can obscure them. When the telegraph announced to us here the astounding fact that Mr. Greeley had been nominated as candidate for President at Cincinnati, a broad smile of derision was visible upon the countenances of the people of this City. Greeley as President of the United States! The thought was too ludicrous. And why? Mr. Greeley has been a prominent and honored citizen of this Commonwealth; his personal purity of life and character is not seriously questioned; his benevolence and good-nature are well known; his fame, even as a newspaper writer, is world-wide. And yet, here, where he is honored and best known, his candidacy appeared ludicrous, because every one felt the oddity of that nomination. A man may be very honest and good-natured, very learned and capable in particular things, and yet he may be utterly unfit for another station and other duties than those in which he has acquired fame. When I think of Mr. Greeley as a philosopher I am reminded of the learned Prof. Neander, of Berlin, who would be so deeply absorbed in his studies that, with a perfectly good eye-sight, he had to be led to the University every morning by another person, because he would be certain to lose himself if left alone. [Laughter and applause.] Imagine Neander to have been nominated for the Chief Magistracy of Germany. [Loud laughter.] President Grant may have committed some blunders, but, on the whole, the country has fared well under his rule, and the American people may well trust him rather than commit their destinies to the Sage of Chappaqua and his surroundings. [Loud applause.] Gov. Salomon closed with an eloquent tribute to "the veteran soldier and statesman, the true, unbending, true John A. Dix, whose name Gen. John A. Dix, with whose election New-York would be redeemed indeed," and retired to his seat amid repeated and enthusiastic outbursts of applause.

Henry Clews then read a list of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries.

HON. LYMAN TREMAIN'S SPEECH.

The Chairman then introduced Hon. Lyman Tremain, who said; When I remember the names of the eminent orators of our political faith, who have addressed you in this hall heretofore, I feel somewhat diffident to continue the discussion. But having been summoned by the Republican Party to come here and advocate the cause, I decline to obey. We have now reached a phase in the campaign when the clouds which seemed to overshadow the prospects of the Republican Party are passing away. If there were at any time those who were so charitable as to believe that there were men who had sailed under false colors, pretending to be Republicans, when they are in reality Democrats, they must now be convinced of their errors. The speaker then continued in a denunciation of the peculiar somersault which Mr. Greeley made from the Republican to the Democratic Party, and roused the audience to a perfect fever of enthusiasm by the eulogy he passed on President Grant and the amendments to the Constitution passed during his Administration. On the other hand, his allusion to the unpominously-ridiculous position of Horace Greeley, now backed by the motley crowd of life-long antagonists, who fought each other and every step of the Republican Union men during the terrible years of the war, brought down the house in rounds of pealing laughter. Then he stated how Mr. Greeley had expressed his bitter feelings and contempt against and for his present adherents. He wields the pen of a ready writer, said he, and he used it freely on the Democratic Party, which he had denounced steadily as secessionists, traitors, knaves, thieves and villains. The Democrats, not to be outdone by their assailant, have always said that Horace was a bundle of ridiculous isms and fancies. The only fix the people now find themselves in is to decide which portrait is the most faithful. Well, all that I can say is, that I believe what each has said of the other is literally correct. Can we then, knowing these estimates each ally has for his fellow in this most singular coalition, expect that they will remain true to their compact? No; assuming that they were successful in the coming campaign, it is a fair inference to draw that the one would have endeavored to cheat the other in the division of the spoils. Going on then to speak of the relative virtues and characteristics of the candidates, Mr. Tremain said that Gen. Grant had done more than any other man who ever held the position as head of any Government to bring peace, and its attendant blessings, in all domestic and foreign relations. Sir Christopher Wren, the great architect of St. Paul's Church, in England, reposes beneath a slab among the many splendid monuments about it. His great work—the edifice above and around him—is his monument. So, too, are Gen. Grant's works and achievements his monument and testimony of his patriotic character. Why, my fellow-citizens, the accused at the bar of justice has a right to point to his past good character for a plea in his favor. Yet the Democrats ask us, the people, to forget the record of the Republican Party during the past ten years. We won't do it. We have a right to our good name, and we will point to it. Gen. Grant has a right to point to his as a reason for his re-election to the Presidency. Then the speaker detailed the many reforms inaugurated and completed by the Republican Administration since the day of the last of the Democratic Presidents. None of the last-named party has ever done anything to be compared with the good deeds of the Republicans. Now, the Democratic Party which has been on trial before the nation for a long time back has done what many a criminal certain of conviction has done before—committed suicide.

The questions are asked which party is bold and honorable and which is cowardly. The Democratic Party has exhibited a cowardice never before known in its history. It has compelled their hard-worked leaders to take back seats, and has stolen a Barkus willing to be stolen from the Republican Party. The Republican Party selects the same man who was elected three years ago, presents him to the people as their choice, and, making up no new doctrines, points to what they have done in the past, say, "These are my jewels." Then with regard to discipline. The Democratic Party is too poor to find its own candidate for President, and is too poor to find the funds for carrying on the campaign. The party has gone into bankruptcy, chosen Horace Greeley as assignee, and those who have any claims against the party must apply at the Captain's office in the Tribune building. As the party is so poor, he would advise the Republican Party to make an extra assessment and help them out, providing they agree to keep Horace Greeley and Gratz Brown in the field. As to their arguments, he had read the speeches of the leaders at the "succotash ratification meeting held in this City last week," and found many complaints but no arguments. The Democratic Party have even pursued with their abuse Henry Wilson, that noble patriot of Massachusetts, who, for twenty-five years a representative from that honest, moral State. He, who had been through life the friend of the laboring classes and the friend of the slave, has been charged by frauds through the Credit Mobilier, a slander that has been proved to be false from beginning to the very end, in aggregate and in detail. He then alluded to the nomination for Governor, John A. Dix, and said that during his whole long career, not a single word of slander had ever been uttered against him until Horace Greeley began the attack; but in the State where he was so well known, such charges need no refutation. He then replied to the accusations that had been made against himself, who, without solicitation, had been selected as a candidate for Congressman at large. He objected to answer personal slanders until they became objects of intended injury to the party with whom he was associated. He then read the slanders from the Tribune, World and Albany Argus, in which he had been called (in consequence of a speech made by him nearly three months before the outbreak of the war) a spouting rebel and secessionist. He then read from the official report of the Convention held in Albany in February, 1861, the defense of the speech had made before the Convention, and said that no person could find in the whole proceedings any evidence to show that he even gave the slightest encouragement for the idea of breaking up the Government. He read passages to show that even at that early period he took strong ground against secession, and contended at that time that the General Government could not surrender its sovereignty except by an amendment of the Constitution. He told the Convention that the American Union had to be preserved, not destroyed; but he desired them to calm the excitement, so that the Southern passion should cool and thus prevent a collision. He never for a moment thought that the South had hatched up a conspiracy to destroy the Government; but, believing them to be impulsive, he argued with the same words as Andrew Jackson, that, if a war must come, it ought not to be through any aggressive act of the Government. His speech was made on the second day of the Convention, he being absent in Court on the first; and, after it had been spoken, he left the Convention and again resumed his place in the Courts. He said emphatically that there never was a drop of secession blood in his veins by thought, word, or deed. If he had advocated that the States had a right to secede without the consent of the other States, he should have been false to his ancestry and his education. The Convention at the time applauded to the echo every sentiment uttered by him, and the Argus applauded it on Feb. 2, 1861, publishing in full on Feb. 16. In September, 1861, the Democratic Party, to which he had always belonged before the war, nominated him for Attorney-General of the State, but finding that party to be opposed to prosecuting the war then raging, he declined in a letter which he read to the meeting, and which he said was at the time published. This letter, in which he proclaimed secession as a political heresy, was received with great applause. It has been said his record was a little trouble him from the field, but this he proclaimed that he would never be driven from the field by any such slanders as had been uttered. He showed also that the Argus assailed Lincoln's proclamation calling for 75,000 troops from the States, and read from the Argus of the next day a speech he made against the law of 1795, and showing that the President's proclamation was right and constitutional. He then referred to his address at that time on the duty of Democrats to sustain the President and constitutional authorities, and in which he said: "Let what will come, they must stand by the flag of the country, which must not be allowed to go down in the dust." He then in a feeling manner spoke of his son, who at his own request went into the service during the war, and after participating in twenty-five engagements under Sheridan, &c., and rose to be Lieutenant-Colonel of the Tenth New-York Cavalry, fell dead in February, 1865, while leading his regiment toward Richmond. This allusion was greeted with long-continued and deafening cheers. He said if all his defamers had been such opponents rebels and secessionists the war would have ended in two instead of four years. He next read several extracts from the Tribune, in which he was favorably spoken of at the time of former nominations, and showed that in 1865, when nominated for Assembly, that paper had wound up a favoring editorial by saying "Give us more such;" again, in 1866, on the question of Speaker of the Legislature, the same favorable comments were made. He alluded to the sacrifices of political, personal and social relations he had made when the country was in peril, and even the present one, where he was willing to become the target for the malignant attacks of his opponents. He was ready to sacrifice everything but personal honor. He then reviewed the record of his opponent and defamer, S. S. Cox, the mention of whose name elicited a shower of hisses. He showed that on the vote for the Constitutional Amendment to abolish slavery, the name of Cox stands recorded on all occasions in the negative, as also on the measure to extend the act of 1795 to empower the President to raise troops in time of rebellion. He also read from Mr. Cox's speech in Chicago during the Presidential campaign of Gen. McClellan, where he said Lincoln and Davis ought to be executed together. If the records of both parties had to be compared, he (Tremain) should not shrink from the comparison. With regard to the Presidential candidate, he read from the American Conflict his opinions that States had a right to secede, and showed that he had since declared the same theory, even holding on to it at the present time. He also read the Tribune's opinion and classification of Democrats, and said that Greeley ought to know the persons he described as he was now found in their company. He showed that, so far as record was concerned, Horace Greeley stood on the record as rank a secessionist as Jefferson Davis himself, which opinion was confirmed by the editorials of the Southern Press at the present day, some of which he read. After alluding to Gen. Grant and his record, he said that, if Grant were ten thousand times more liable to criticism than he, the speaker, thought he was, he, Grant, was greatly to be preferred to Horace Greeley. He then alluded to the noble work done by the Reformers in purifying the City, and trusted that the work would still go on until all the country was purified, and the corrupting influence of Democracy buried forever.

GRANT TO DIX.

Letter of Congratulation from the President to the Future Governor.

The following letter from President Grant to Gen. DIX, congratulating him upon his nomination by the Republican Convention at Utica, has just been made public:

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Aug. 24.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I congratulate you upon the unanimity and enthusiasm of the Utica Convention on the occasion of your nomination for the honorable and responsible position of Governor of the great State of New-York. Especially do I congratulate the citizens of that State, almost irrespective of party, upon your nomination. I believe you will receive the active support of the great majority of the best people of the State, and the secret sympathy of thousands who may be so bound up by parties and pledges as to force them to support your opponent.

To doubt your election would be to impugn the intelligence and patriotism of a people by whose enlightened discrimination such eminently good men as Tompkins, Clinton, Marcy, Wright, Seward, Fenton and Morgan have been elevated to the Chief Magistracy of the Empire State. With your election, reforms in the State will naturally follow, which, all acknowledge, have been much needed for years.

No one acquainted with the political history of New-York for the past eight years will claim that all the abuses of legislation are due to Democratic rule, but members, or at least pretended members, of both political parties share the responsibility of them.

When I read the proceedings of the Convention of the 21st inst., and of the unanimity of feeling in favor of you as an associate on the State ticket, I felt that victory had been already achieved, and reform inaugurated in the State of New-York.

Again I congratulate you, not upon the prospect of being Governor, but upon having it within your reach to render such service to your State.

It is a happy day when conventions seek candidates, not candidates nominations. This dream has been realized in the action of the Convention of the 21st inst., at Utica, N. Y.

I have the honor to be, General, your most obedient servant, U. S. GRANT.

Gen. JOHN A. DIX, New-York.

LEAFIELD, WEST HAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1872.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I am very thankful to you for your kind letter of congratulation on my nomination for the office of Governor of this State. You are aware, no doubt, that I declined it before the Convention was held. I am deeply sensible of the honor conferred on me, especially by the manner in which it was tendered; but my objections to the acceptance of the nomination are so strong that I would not think of it unless there were in it for the less concern I feel in the result of the election, and the great public interests at stake.

I expect Mrs. Dix to arrive from Europe on 2d or 3d prox., and as soon as I am able to confer with her I shall reply to the letter of the President of the Convention, advising me of my nomination. I am, dear General, very respectfully and sincerely yours, JOHN A. DIX.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT.

The Swarming of Falsehoods.

From the Evening Post.

The TIMES published the other day a long list of atrocious lies that had been invented and circulated during the present canvass, in order to injure the President or his immediate friends. Since then a half dozen others, even more atrocious, might be added to the catalogue, so that before the election it promises to become as formidable in size, if not in exaggeration, as the comedy record which Leperello unfolds before the heedless eyes of Don Giovanni. These lies are not petty lies, disclosing some ludicrous peccadillo, or betraying an ungainly trait of personal character, but monstrous falsehoods, which, if they were true, should render the subjects of them candidates for Sing Sing rather than candidates for high official position.

Nearly all our Presidential contests, to our shame be it said, have abounded in low, vulgar, abusive and disgraceful assaults upon personal character. The immaculate virtue and exalted fame of Washington were not shielded from even from the malignant attacks of his political enemies. Jefferson, than whom a purer patriot or more accomplished gentleman never lived, was literally blackened by the filth cast upon his good name. Jackson was proclaimed to be an assassin, a wife murderer, an ignoramus and a tyrant; and the patient, humble, noble Lincoln was ridiculed as an ape, and denounced as a brutal and blood-thirsty ghoul. But none of these illustrious men were exposed to more unblushing, reckless, and ferocious libels than Gen. Grant has been, whose personal habits, whose business affairs, whose family relations are dragged before the public in the most contemptible and odious light. It is vain that his friends and companions, after disregarding the falsehoods for a time as too despicable to be noticed, come forward in his defense; it is vain that citizens of irreproachable character like Judge Hoar, Gov. Jewell, Gen. Webster assure the public of the utter untruthfulness of the allegations; the party press continues to circulate them, and the party orators, some of them, we are certain of from their own characters, under complete misapprehension, continue to comment upon them from the platform. Gen. Grant has not been, it is well known, an ideal statesman in our opinion, but we confess that, in view of the kind of calumny with which he is visited, we are disposed to repeat what W. B. Hanson said the other day of the San Domingo affair: "Our regard for the character and services of the President is stirred into enthusiasm by our keen sense of the scandalous injustice of the aspersions which he has too much self-respect and reticence to deny."

Still another instance of the shameless recklessness of the Press, in its assaults upon reputation, take the story of the Oakes Ames' scheme for the bribery of certain members of Congress, to which we alluded yesterday. In a suit at law, now pending in Pennsylvania, one of the parties to the suit has filed a bill, said to be written by Mr. Oakes Ames, in which he proposes to distribute a large number of the shares of stock in the Credit Mobilier among members of Congress "where they will produce the most good." Accompanying this letter is a memorandum, inscribed by Mr. Ames, containing the names of those whom he is going to bribe, with the number of shares attached to each, as follows:

	Shares.
Blaine, of Maine	3,000
Patterson, of New-Hampshire	2,000
Wilson, of Massachusetts	2,000
Painter, (Republican,) for Quincy	2,000
S. Colfax, Speaker	2,000
Scofield and Kelley, of Pennsylvania, (each)	2,000
Rhoe, of Massachusetts	2,000
Dawes, of Massachusetts	2,000
Power, of Tennessee	2,000
Bromberg, of Massachusetts	2,000
Bingham and Garfield, or Ohio, (each)	2,000

It would seem, according to McComb's story, that there were 36,000 of these shares at the par value of $100, but which were worth, in his estimation, from $500 to $1,000,or which about $0,000 shares, or from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000 worth were to be set aside for the benefit of the purchased members. Thirty thousand shares were to be devoted to the protection and advancement of the remaining 6,000, which is rather a generous mode of doing business, it must be confessed, and which throws even the enormous liberality of Fisk and Gould into the shade. That master of legislative corruption assigned his tools varying sums of from $500 to $10,000; he may have promised, in cases of extreme and exacting virtue, $40,000 or $50,000; but Ames was no such petit larceny scoundrel, and proposed to scatter his douceurs by the million. Speaker Blaine's share, if he ever got them, were worth, on McComb's valuation, no less than a million and a half, as were those of Patterson and Elliot. Why Boutwell, Colfax, Wilson, Bingham and Dawes, who are quite as good men as they, should have received only a million each, does not appear. Was their virtue easier?

Now, who are the men who are said to have been purchased in this way? Obscure, insignificant, doubtful characters? Not at all; but the foremost men of Congress and of the nation. Judge Bingham, Gen. Garfield, Speaker Blaine, Mr. Dawes, Mr. Boutwell, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Colfax, &c., have been before the public for many years; their integrity as men has never been questioned by anybody that knew them; if they are scoundrels, then there are no honest men any more; our public halls are a shamble, and public life in the nation is no better than the life of a gambling hell or of the lowest policy-shop in the slums of New-York; and instead of aspiring to the name of a republic, we ought to hasten to ask in the very first brutal soldier that would purge the commonwealth with his thundering cannon. Yet there are journals which do not scruple to publish, day by day, charges against such men that are preposterous on their face, wholly unsupported by any evidence beyond the merest conjecture, and which, if true, would consign them to the lowest depths of ofloquy, and disgrace the whole country in the person of its most distinguished representatives.

Some of the gentlemen maligned have not thought it beneath their dignity to give a formal contradiction to these infamous libels. Mr. Ames himself, in an address to his constituents, yesterday, showed that these charges had years ago been met and answered, and that they were not only absolutely false, but preposterous. Mr. Blaine, Mr. Dawes, Mr. Wilson and Gen. Garfield pronounce them to be without the shadow of a foundation; but, for our part, we think they are only properly treated with scorn. The very denial of them is a secession simply for fresh devices of scurrility and insult. How, for example, could a mercenary charge be impugned in more comprehensive, pertinent and satisfactory words than those of Mr. Dawes, that "neither Oakes Ames, nor any other man, dead or alive, ever gave me, directly or indirectly, a penny of the stock of the 'Credit Mobilier,' or of any other corporation in this world. I never owned a dollar of any stock or any property of any kind that I did not pay the full value of, with my own money, earned with my own labor." And yet the retailers of calumny cry, "It will not do; it is evasive; it is disingenuous;" and go on repeating their lies without end.

AMUSEMENTS.

PATTI-MARIO CONCERTS.

The good impression of Monday's Patti-Mario concert was deepened by yesterday's performance to an extent the most enthusiastic admirer of the artists concerned could hardly have foreseen. A more comprehensive programme, and one more skillfully interpreted, could not have been desired. The fourteen numbers of the evening were rendered with uniformly satisfying results, and, had the desires of the audience been heeded whenever expressed, each of the selections would have been repeated, to the indefinite prolongation of the entertainment. The expectation that the huskiness which affected Signor Mario's voice on the night of his reappearance would depart without delay was happily realized. Very slight traces of the indisposition remained; and if, in one or two instances, the high notes were not promptly responsive to the singer's summons, Signor Mario generally not only attained, but sustained them; while, at the close of the sestetti—recited as a quartet, by the way—the production of a tone of unquestionable power caused an outburst of applause. To say that Signor Mario delivered his lines with infinite sentiment and consummate art must add little to the enlightenment of most of our readers. The tenderness of his utterances in the duet "Se la stanchezza," from "Il Trovatore;" the poesy of his delivery of "Salve dimora," to the music of which, as to that of "Spirto gentil," the singer has wedded Italian words embodying the sense of the original French verses in a degree the authors of the familiar Italian version never cared to secure; and the merry grace of his French chansonette did not suffer for any lack of vocal resources, and all the artist's work was redemanded and done anew with an increased spirit which naught but success can beget. Miss Carlotta Patti triumphed over her hearers as gaily and as easily as usual. Her execution of "Caro nome" was not deficient in expressiveness, and its comparatively small exigencies were scarcely trying to the songstress who, on Monday, made so light of the difficulties of Proch's "Air and Variations;" and that of the waltz from Ricci's "Folie à Rome" was firmer and more brilliant even than the composer could have foreseen as in store for his composition. In acknowledgement of the encores, Miss Patti sang a Spanish song and the "Laughing Song" from "Manon Lescaut." M. Saurel's experience, yesterday, was fully as gratifying as that of an earlier occasion. M. Saurel is aged about eighteen; in spite of his extreme youth, his technique is perfect. To a thorough command of the finger-board and to a management of the bow, distinguished alike by grace and certainty, he unites sensibility and taste rarely apparent in artists so immature in years. M. Sauret played last night, Vieuxtemps' "Ballad and Polonaise"—a perilous experiment, with the broad and powerful rendering of the author still in one's ears—and Paganini's exceedingly exacting variations on "Di Tanti Palpiti," the last named number compelling an unanimous demonstration of delight by the exhibition of immense difficulties quietly overcome. Mlle. Carreño was listened to twice. We cannot but say that we have enjoyed more thoughtful readings and more finished execution of Chopin's ballad in A minor; but, unreserved praise can be bestowed upon the recital of Gottschalk's arrangement of the "Miserere" from "Il Trovatore," the finale of the piece being delivered with astonishing vigor and unexceptionable clearness. Miss Cary, had she returned to us unchanged since last year's concerts, would have been deserving of a hearty welcome. Her rentrée, however, has revealed her possession of the superb organ admired since Miss Nilsson's début in the United States; and the supplemental fact that her style has been much bettered. Miss Cary sang the rondo, "No, no, no, no, no," from "Gli Ugonotti," with equal charm of voice and method, and the contralto's share of the duet with Signor Mario. The solo was followed by an English ballad. The remaining features of the bill were "Largo al Factotum," delivered with all his wonted humor by that best of buffo-singers, Signor Ronconi; and three selections for the orchestra, capitally directed by Mr. S. Behrens. The third Patti-Mario concert may be attended to-morrow evening.

RUBINSTEIN CONCERTS.

The sale of tickets for the Rubinstein concerts, the first of which will take place on Monday next, will be commenced at 9 o'clock this morning.

TAMMANY'S TROUBLES.

The Smelling Committee Overhauling Braves Who are Disgusted With Greeley—Lively Tilts Yesterday.

The Subcommittee of the Tammany General Committee, consisting of Messrs. Fitzpatrick, John Morrissey, Justice Ledwith, Wm. A. Walsh and E. Plum, selected to make a diagnosis and administer such remedies as were deemed applicable, met at Tammany Hall yesterday. The session lasted from 4 P. M. until evening. The Committee sat with a determination to clear the General Committee of all members who were not known to be sound Tammanyites, and to discover this fact measures had been taken to make every man "show his hand." Everybody who had charges to make against members of the General Committee and the accused had been notified to attend the meeting. The Assembly Districts which appeared to show the most signs of disaffection are as follows: The Third, Fourth, Eighth, Ninth, Seventeenth and Twenty-first.

From inquiries made it appeared that while there was but little trouble in the Third, Ninth and Seventeenth Districts there was much to cause annoyance and apprehension in some of the others named. The Fourth District was represented to be greatly disorganized, not only on account of the Grant and Wilson and O'Brien disaffection, but because of a political fight between Shandley and Bagley.

In the eighth it was charged that Judge Scott, who has hitherto wielded a powerful influence for Tammany, had openly declared that he would not vote for Greeley and Brown and Kerman, that he preferred Grant and Wilson and Dix, and was willing to pay money that Grant would be elected. In the Twenty-first District, a similar charge of a leaning to Grant was preferred against Harry Genet, and in the Seventeenth, Peter Masterson, it was charged, while declaring that he would support the Tammany national and State tickets, acknowledged a preference for O'Brien as Mayor. Wm. Colligan, of the Fourth Assembly District, was also in favor of O'Brien for Mayor, and tendered his resignation on his examination. It was charged by some that Boss Tweed was using his influence to carry off his friends for Grant, but nobody present had any proof to offer for the statement. An illustration of the spirit pervading the gathering was a scene between Judge Scott and Warden Tracey. Mr. Tracey, Alderman Kraus and Billy Glover, appeared before the Committee with the charges against Judge Scott before stated. After about fifteen minutes spent in the rooms the party came out, Warden Tracy and Judge Scott in animated discussion. Warden Tracy was stigmatised by Scott as a political squatter, and Tracey retorted that Scott was a Whig, Know-nothing, Democrat and anything that best suited his interest. Loud words passed between them on the sidewalk, Scott smiling, while Tracey seemed to be somewhat out of temper. A few words were then spoken between them in low tones, when Tracey said loudly, "I don't owe you anything and don't want anything from you," and jumping into his buggy drove away with a defiant air. This little scene did not seem to increase the general happiness and earnest canvasses were afterward held by Justice Couiter, Mr. Dunlap, Thos. J. Gibbons and others. The Committee declined to give any information to reporters, except that a final report was to be made out for the action of the General Committee, and all members who were opposed to the nominations of Tammany Hall would be "read out" of the organization.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At the Exchange yesterday, Wednesday, Sept. 18, A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co., at public auction, sold the property known as Nos. 381 and 383 Houston-street, south-east corner of Willett-street, embracing a plot of ground 37.3 by 65, with two buildings thereon, the corner house being a four-story brick, 17.3 by 42, and the adjoining house a three-story brick front, 20 by 33. The premises were bought by John J. Barchell for $19,600, and the price was considered low. The buildings are in poor repair, but the location is a desirable one. Joseph McGuire also sold, by order of the Supreme Court in foreclosure, under the direction of Chas. C. Bigelow, Esq., referee, a three-story and basement high-stoop brown-stone house and lot, (latter 19.5 by 86.9) situate on the north side of Thirtieth-street 166 feet 4 inches east of Second-avenue, for $16,500, the purchaser being Dorr Russell, a second mortgagee. This purchase was a bargain, for the house is in excellent order, frescoed throughout, and was, as we learn, appraised four years ago as valued at $25,000. No other sales were made and the following adjournment, as announced, closed the day's business. Legal sale of house and lot, No. 705 Fourth-street, adjourned by E. H. Ludlow & Co. until the 25th inst.; and legal sale of house and lot on Sixty-eighth-street, near Fourth-avenue, adjourned by James M. Miller to Oct. 3.

For today, at the Exchange, a number of legal auctions are noticed, some of them of importance, and particularly that in charge of Messrs. Bleecker & Co. They are as follows: Supreme Court sale, by A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co., of five new four-story high-stoop brown-stone front houses and lots, known as Nos. 403, 405, 407, 411 and 413 West Fifty-seventh-street, north side, 25 feet west of Ninth-avenue; Supreme Court sale, by Hugh N. Camp, of house and lot on Second-avenue, between Forty-second and Forty-third streets; Supreme Court sale, by James M. Miller, of house and lot on Forty-third-street, 415 feet 8 inches east of Second-avenue, and a similar sale by the same auctioneer of the house and lot No. 199 Church-street. The legal sale in charge of E. H. Ludlow & Co., noticed on Monday for today, of house and lot on Eighty-first-street, west of Lexington-avenue, has been settled, and consequently the property will not be offered. Today, also, at Queens, Long Island, on the premises, at 12½ o'clock, Jere. Johnson, Jr., will offer at public auction 400 choice building sites, all well located, accessible to New-York by both the Central and Long Island Railways, and distant from Hunter's Point but twenty-eight minutes. This is one of the best sales ever projected on Long Island, and should attract the attention of investors generally. Special train, via Jamesslip and Thirty-fourth-street Ferries, at 30½ o'clock, for which free tickets can be obtained of the auctioneers, at No. 25 Nassau-street.

At private contract A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co., No. 77 Cedar-street, report having sold, for $7,000, the tract of land, 91 by 150 by 25 by 165, with buildings thereon, located at West Farms, Westchester County, and situate at the junction of Locust-avenue Boulevard, Division-street and the old Boston road. The purchaser being B. D. Bradley. The following recent private sales of City real estate are also reported: By Wm. H. Rayner, No. 53½ Pine-street, plot of twelve lots, six each fronting, respectively, on One Hundred and Thirty-first and One Hundred and Thirty-second streets, 125 feet west of Seventh-avenue, sold for $40,000. By L. J. Phillips, plot of eight lots on the north-west corner of Eighth-avenue and One Hundred and Eighth-street, sold for $73,000, and by Stephen D. Yancey, two full lots on the south side of Fifty-seventh-street, 500 feet west of Fifth avenue, sold for $60,000.

A BEAUTIFUL PLOT OF LAND AT WHITESTONE, L. I.,

Has just been cut into LOTS by AUG. P. WEEKES, Esq., late President of the J. L. Mott Iron Works, and

WILL BE SOLD AT AUCTION BY JERE. JOHNSON, Jr., Sept. 24, 1872.

Money cannot be invested at greater profit than by purchasing some of these lots.

People of moderate means can live at Whitestone more pleasantly, more happily, and at less cost, than in the City.

Forty-one trains daily, from 10 minutes before 6 A. M. to 15 minutes past 12, midnight. Running time to Hunter's Point, 26 and 30 minutes. Comfortable travel; elegant cars; every patent contrivance for comfort; foot-warmer under every seat; Miller's platforms, buffers, steam brakes; steel rails, &c. As convenient and accessible to the City Hall as 50th-st., New-York. Commutation, 6½ cents per trip, between Whitestone and Hunter's Point. A FREE TICKET FOR ONE YEAR given to each house, costing $2,000, built before next May.

Whitestone is a charming place to live in; its residents can come in to business, to shop, concert, theatre, calls, or church, without any trouble; first-rate society; it is not at all "lonesome;" beautiful scenery, boating, driving, pure air, water, and milk; living cheaper than in the City; in short, CITY COMFORTS WITH COUNTRY PLEASURES. No healthier place can be found; high ground, well drained; cool in Summer, mild in Winter. Churches and schools. Water will soon be introduced; the Trustees are maturing plans for it; the bill for it has passed the Legislature. The village taxes are limited, by charter, to ½ of one per cent. A pretty, substantial house of five to seven rooms, much better than a flat or part of a house, can be built by paying in installments. Larger houses in proportion. Capitalists are ready to lend money for it. The Whitestone Savings Bank has money to lend on Bond and Mortgage.

THE GROWTH OF WHITESTONE IS CERTAIN; it has valuable water-front and anchorage; the removal of the Hell Gate obstructions will make its values triple; it is a railroad centre, and the most convenient and pleasant suburban home near the City.

Terms for these Lots, 10 per cent. cash on day of sale; 20 per cent. on Oct. 24, balance on mortgage 5 years, or FIVE PER CENT. OFF THE MORTGAGE FOR CASH.

Call on JERE. JOHNSON, Jr., No. 25 Nassau-st., or at the office of Mr. Weekes' Attorney, Geo. W. Van Siclen, Esq., No. 153 Nassau-st., and get maps and passes.

Pupils return for next term on Sept. 17, 1872.

FRIENDS' SEMINARY, Corner Rutherford-place and East 16th-st., opposite Stuyvesant-square.

The twelfth annual session of this institution commences on the 16th day of 9th month, 1872, under the care of a superintendent, a full corps of experienced professors and teachers, for special studies, including the languages. It offers to its patrons superior facilities for a thorough practical and classical education, and pupils wishing for such a course will be prepared to do so. The situation of the Seminary, in close proximity to Stuyvesant-square, is unequaled, affording fine opportunity for recreation and exercise. The school-rooms have been refitted with every convenience for the health and comfort of the pupils, and fitted in the best manner with modern furniture and furnished with all appliances of apparatus, &c., &c., needful in a first-class school. Circulars can be had at the Seminary. Applications for admission may be made to the Principal, at the Seminary, or either of the Trustees.

MOUNT PLEASANT MILITARY ACADEMY, A SELECT BOARDING-SCHOOL FOR BOYS AT SING-SING, ON THE HUDSON.

A FINANCIAL COUP D'ETAT.

Secretary Boutwell Comes to the Rescue of the People.

The Gold Gamblers' Game Blocked—Anticipations of an Exciting End—The Victims of the Scheme.

The action of Secretary Boutwell in the purchase of $3,000,000 of bonds yesterday, thereby breaking the gold corner and easing the money market, was the occasion of much favorable comment among the bankers and brokers of Wall-street, as well as among the mercantile community in every part of the City. The business men of the country readily recognize the necessity of a checking power to the operations of bold and unscrupulous gamblers, which threaten to ruin not only those with whom they deal personally, but also those who have no interest immediately at stake. The course of Secretary Boutwell, then, in changing the routine of his bond buying to suit the wants of the nation and check gold gambling, elicits the warmest approbation of all classes of the mercantile community, and was regarded in Wall-street, except by the few whose nefarious schemes for the demoralization of traffic were thwarted, as an eminently wise and judicious proceeding. Larger sales of gold by the Treasury than usual are predicted for to-day, although many think the clique received its death blow yesterday, and further exercise of power by the Government will be useless at present.

The decline in the price of stocks and the extremely tight money-market, has had the usual effect in causing some of the weaker firms to succumb, and yesterday the failure of two was announced in the Stock Exchange, Messrs. Farnham, Gilbert & Co., of Wall-street, and Howard, Joins & Co., Nassau-street. The former firm was recently established in Wall-street in brokerage business, having previously been engaged in the dry goods trade. The inexperience of the members of the firm in the peculiar operations of the Street is attributed as a reason for this downfall, they, as well as many others, being heavily short of stocks. Not finding a sufficiency of legitimate business, owing to the great difficulty of drawing it from old and well-established houses, the firm it is said, found it necessary to embark in speculation on its own account and failed. The exact liabilities are not stated, but they are said to be large. The failure of Howard, Joines & Co., is conceded to be a small affair, and will have little influence upon other firms. Several other firms are said to be in difficulty, and considerable stock was sold under the rules. The Gold clique drew a large amount of currency from the banks last night on certified checks held over from Monday night, expecting to counteract the effect of the purchases of bonds by Secretary Boutwell. This morning it is expected the currency will be used to purchase the gold which the Government will sell, and the currency be again withdrawn from the market by a sale of more stocks. The issue of the day is awaited with great anxiety by the mercantile community.

THE TURF.

Prospect Park—Second Day of the Fall Meeting—Crown Prince Wins the 2:30 Purse, and Joe Brown the 2:31 Purse.

Yesterday was the second day of the Fall meeting of the Prospect Park Fair Ground Association, and the attendance was much larger than that which witnessed the trotting on the first day. The weather was all that could be desired, and the track was in superb condition. There were two races on the programme. The first race was for a purse of $1,500, for horses that had never beaten 2:26, which had three entries—Crown Prince, Gray Eddy and Charley Green. Crown Prince was made the favorite, and sold at large odds against the other two, and justified the confidence of his backers by winning an excellent race in three straight heats, of which the following are the details:

FIRST HEAT.—On the third score the word was received, with Charley Green in the lead, Crown Prince second and Gray Eddy third. When they reached the turn Charley Green left his feet, but did not lose his position until he got stranded, when Gray Eddy pushed to the front, and at the quarter-pole was a length and a half in front of Crown Prince, who was half a length in advance of Charley Green. As they went down the backstretch the horses were in the same positions, a length apart, but approaching the half-mile pole Crown Prince lapped the wheels of Eddy, and when they passed that point, in 1:14¼, the latter was showing the way half a length, Charley Green two lengths behind. On the lower turn Crown Prince went up and headed Eddy, but the latter held his position and passed the three-quarter pole a neck in advance. Coming up the homestretch the two grays had a tough struggle, but Gray Eddy, under the masterly guidance of Dan Mace, won the heat by half a length, Charley Green half a dozen lengths behind. Time—2:29¾.

SECOND HEAT.—Crown Prince sold for $310 and the field $60. On the first attempt they were sent off, with Green first, Crown Prince second and Gray Eddy third. At the turn Gray Eddy went to the front, and passed the quarter-pole in six seconds, a length in front of Crown Prince, who was the same distance in front of Green, who was on a break. As they went along the backstretch Crown Prince out-footed Gray Eddy, and took the lead from him. At the half-mile pole, in 1:16, Crown Prince led a length, Eddy second and five lengths ahead of Green. On the lower turn Prince got further away, and showed two lengths in front at the three-quarter pole. He maintained his lead all the way home, winning by a length in 2:28¾; Green six lengths behind.

THIRD HEAT.—The sixth attempt was a send off, Prince and Green being together, two lengths ahead of Gray Eddy. As they went to the turn Crown Prince went to the lead, and passed the quarter-pole in 37 seconds, a length in front of Charley Green, who was two lengths in advance of Gray Eddy. As they went down the backstretch Green left his feet and Gray Eddy took the second place. They passed the half-mile pole in 1:13, two lengths apart, but on the lower turn Gray Eddy closed to the wheel of Prince, but the latter shook him off and came away, and won the heat by six lengths on a jog, in 2:35¾, Green ten lengths behind.

FOURTH HEAT.—Crown Prince in the lead, Prince second, and Gray Eddy third. At the turn Prince took the lead, and led a length at the quarter-pole, Green second, half a length ahead of Eddy. On the backstretch Eddy passed Green, taking second place, but Prince kept to the front, and won the heat easily by three lengths in 2:29, Gray Eddy second, a neck's length in front of Green.

The Cannstadt Volksfest.

Yesterday was the closing day of the famous Cannstadt Volksfest. The number of visitors yesterday was estimated at about 6,000. The ballet divertissement and the Suavian dance of "Hunting a Hare," and a tableau were presented.

In the afternoon prizes were distributed to a number of little girls who had distinguished themselves in plays, and who were dressed in Suavian peasant costume. The terpsichorean exercises were continued all day until late last night, when the festival closed without mishap or accident.

CRICKET.

The Game at Hoboken, Yesterday, Between the English Eleven and the St. George Club—Thousands of People Present—The Finest Exhibition of Skill Ever Witnessed in this Vicinity.

To say that the cricket-match which was commenced yesterday at Hoboken, between the eleven English gentlemen now on a visit to this country, and twenty-two members of the St. George Club, was enjoyed by thousands as a mere matter of athletic sport, would convey no adequate impression of the excitement which characterised the event. The lines upon lines of people seated on the grass, the ladies and gentlemen in the pavilions, and the members of the St. George Club, from their Clubhouse, watched the game with the greatest earnestness from the time the stumps were pitched in the morning until they were drawn at sundown. A considerable portion of them had little or no knowledge of the game of cricket; but they were told that they would see it played in its perfection, and they went as much to see the novelty as they did to marvel at the skill.

The reception of Mr. Grace, when he appeared, bat in hand, on the field, however flattering to him personally and the great reputation as a cricketer which he has achieved, was in a great measure a tribute to his unprofessional standing. Fortunately he did not disappoint the great expectations which renown had raised; and yet it would have given more interest to the match—it would have done more to encourage cricket in this country—had he been put out before the game closed last evening. It would have eased their apparently-inevitable defeat to the St. George Club. Once Mr. Grace gave a chance that under favorable circumstances would have been fatal to him. In striking to square leg, he "skyed" the ball, (sent it spinning fifty feet high.) As it happened, no one of the whole twenty-two was on the spot, and the gentleman who had to run for it had the sun streaming in his eyes as he looked up at the ball. It was no wonder that he missed his catch. Mr. Grace should thank the sun as well as his stars that he did not retire from his wicket with the modest score of twenty. Otherwise his defense was splendid.

But Mr. Ottaway, who faced him at the other wicket, gave the St. George's men even a more valuable and practical lesson in batting than Mr. Grace. A far less brilliant hitter, and scoring little more than one-third the runs, he, too, held his own staunchly till the stumps were drawn for the day, as did Mr. Grace. But his play all along was a study. He saw at once that the admirable bowling of Brewster and of Wright was not to be trifled with. There he stood at his wicket, without the slightest sign of nervousness, but playing a purely defensive game, and taking advantage now and then of such balls as he felt he could play without risk. He blocked every other ball. Mr. Ottaway's score is the most trustworthy evidence of his play. While Mr. Grace made sixty-seven runs, Mr. Ottaway only made twenty-seven; and these, with the exception of two single cuts to cover-point, were all made to leg and square leg. But he contributed a very valuable score (not out) to his side; while, at the same time, he gave moral and actual support to Mr. Grace by "sticking" to his wicket in the way he did.

Any one arriving on the ground in the afternoon, and witnessing the bowling of Brewster and Wright and the general good fielding, would have been astonished to hear how poorly the twenty-two had batted in the morning. Out of the twenty-six overs which Mr. Brewster bowled, thirteen were maiden overs, (not a run scored,) and that against no renowned batsmen as Mr. Grace. The Wrights, too, and Jones bowled in first-rate style, their only misfortune being the purely scientific defense against which they were contending. The fielding, too, of the Wrights and Hatfield was as quick as that of the English eleven. In fact, the fielding all round was excellent. But the batting was too good for it, and not a chance was given to the fielders.

No more magnificent day could have been wished for than the cloudless sky and refreshing breeze which welcomed the players when they reached Hoboken. The ground outside the flags was covered with spectators, and a goodly supply of ladies gave an air of liveliness and gaiety to the scene. There could not have been less than from 2,500 to 3,000 visitors on the ground during the day. The St. George Club won the toss, and elected to put their men in first, and at 12 o'clock Bance and Jackson appeared at the wickets. The English eleven were placed in the field as follows, of course taking their alternate places according to from which wicket the ball was bowled: Appleby and Rose, bowlers and short slip; Fitzgerald, short leg and mid off; Grace, point; E. Lubbock, long stop and mid on; A. Lubbock, mid-off and mid-on; Francis, short leg and cover point; Hadow, forward point and cover point; Harris, short leg and long field off; Pickering, long stop and long field on; Hornby, square leg and third man; Ottaway, wicket keeper. It must be remembered that these positions were constantly changed, not only when the overs were called, but to suit slow or fast bowling, hard hitters, and, especially, left-handed players. Appleby bowled from the lower wicket. He is left handed, and sends a tolerably swift ball, well home, with a shoot. He bowls round hand. Rose depends entirely on the twist of a slow underhand ball, pitched well home. His balls look simple enough, but they are puzzling at first, and need a little patience to get the run of them—just that amount of patience which the St. George men would not bestow on them. Mr. Ottaway's wicket-keeping was a pretty sight. Again and again the spectators looked at the long stop expecting him to field the ball, while it was already firmly in Mr. Ottaway's grasp. The St. George men were too wise to run out at Rose's slows. Had they done so they would not have had the trouble of returning to their wicket. Mr. Grace was almost like a cat, so stealthily did he prowl about as point. Twice he caught men within three or four yards of the wicket.

Several overs were bowled before either Jackson or Bance made a venture, when Jackson sent the ball between short slip and point and scored one. After making a good hit to square leg he was caught by Grace and Mr. Fortun took his place. Bance quickly followed Jackson to the pavilion, being caught by Hadow at cover point. Jones then joined Fortun, and for a few minutes it looked as though they were going to make a stand. Fortun made three singles and Jones made a hit to mid on for two, a slip for two, two singles, and another good hit for two; and then Fortun made a fine leg hit for 3. But in the next over Jones was caught by A. Lubbock, and Cashman took the bat. He only added 1 to the score, and was soon bowled by Appleby, as a punishment for hitting wildly at a splendid ball. Fortun was shortly afterward caught easily by Mr. Harris at long field. Sleigh and Moeran next had possession of the wickets, but Sleigh, after contributing 2 from a leg hit, was caught by Appleby at short slip. On again taking the over, Appleby perceptibly increased the pace of his balls, and Moeran, who is an old Marlborough (England) College man, two or three daisy-cutters, the last of which he "skyed" between the wickets. Appleby made a rush, and just succeeded in making a magnificent catch with his right hand—he being a left-handed man—and the ball having a spin on it, which made it difficult to hold. Moeran, out without scoring, was a great loss to the twenty-two. Keiler who was next in, made a fair hit for 2 to left field, a good one for 2 to right field, a and after scoring 6 was bowled by Appleby. George Wright made a good hit for 2, gave a splendid chance for a catch to right field which was missed, and after running up 6, took a liberty with a dangerous ball from Appleby and saw his leg stump fly three feet in the air. Lemon was caught by Ottaway, behind the wicket, without scoring; and Appleby bowled down Torrance's stumps the first ball he gave him. Cox then tried to make a stand, and ran up the highest score, 10, composed of three singles, a pretty leg hit for 3, a hit to right field for 2, and 1 to square leg. He wound up by poking the ball clean into Appleby's hands at short slip. Bowman scored 2 and was caught by Grace. Greig made 1 to square leg and was run out, and McDougal, after scoring 2 to right field, sent a sky catch to leg into Fitzgerald's hands. Hatfield and H. Wright, being both first-class base-ball players, gave their friends some little hope of still making a good total; but they did very little. They would hit at any and every ball that came along; and Hatfield was soon bowled by Appleby after scoring 2, and Wright, who survived him long enough to run up 8, including two 2s to cover point, was caught by Harris. Brewster made a drive for 2 and two singles, and then hit right over one of Rose's slows which took his middle stump. Gibbs started with a fine leg hit for 3; but after scoring one more run to left field he was bowled by Appleby. Sparks only scored 1 when Appleby sent him a shooter which took his leg stump. Talbot, after scoring 1, was caught by A. Cubbock before Eyre had a chance of doing anything.

Some little time was lost in rolling the ground and in getting the somewhat unwieldy field of twenty-two into position; but at last they were all ready, and a burst of applause greeted Mr. Grace and Mr. Ottaway as they quickly made their way to the wickets. H. Wright and Brewster were the bowlers, Bowman wicket-keeper and Fortun long stop. Brewster started with four maiden overs, and Wright had the temerity to try slows at Grace and Ottaway. Grace made three singles, Ottaway hit to leg for two and to cover point for one, and then Grace sent a full pitch to square leg over the fence for five amid a round of applause. From that moment he seemed to have his hand in. After contenting himself with one or two singles he made another hit to square leg for six, again over the fence, and quickly followed with a drive for 4. The scoring then went steadily but surely on. The St. George men put on Moreau in place of Wright, and soon afterward Jones in place of Brewster. They changed the bowling again and again, but there stood Grace and Ottaway at the wickets, apparently prepared to stay there all night. Grace kept cutting the ball in all directions, Ottaway kept quietly pegging away to leg. Before the stumps were drawn Ottaway had scored 27, and Grace had run up to 67, including three 4s, one 5, four 3s and two 2s, making with 4 byes, 1 leg-bye and 3 wides a total of 102 without the loss of a wicket for the English eleven. The following is a summary of the score:

Mr. Sumner's Position.

From the Christian Union.

The greater marvel has had its lesser counterpart. The Democrats of the country have nominated Horace Greeley for President, and the Democrats of Massachusetts have nominated Charles Sumner for Governor! Shall we not hear next that Pius IX. has recommended Father Hyacinthe as his successor?

Mr. Sumner's position as an opponent of the Republican candidate for President is thus brought into fresh prominence and invites thoughtful consideration. Why is he in opposition to the great body of his fellow associates? Mr. Greeley's friends are fighting their battle mainly on the Southern question. How does Mr. Sumner stand in this matter as to them and as to the Republican Party? He has always been a denouncer of "centralizing" legislation, have had no warmer advocate than Charles Sumner. He has made not only the personal security of the blacks, but their enjoyment of the minutest social privileges, paramount to all other considerations. It was directly on this that the Amnesty bill of the last Congress was delayed for months; and only in his absence was it passed at all. He insisted on joining to it a civil rights clause, of very doubtful constitutionality. He even periled this, his pet measure, by so coupling it with the Amnesty bill that each hindered the other. His whole course in these matters has been consistently, uniformly, for the most radical and vigorous coercive policy toward the South.

With such a record, how is it possible for Mr. Sumner to join with a party whose great cry is the removal of oppressive legislation from the South? Mr. Schurz and Mr. Trumbull are consistent. They have steadily opposed the legislation now complained of. But Mr. Sumner—with what self-respect can he join the cry against oppression of the South? With what face can he attack Grant as a tyrant over the Southern people—he whose little finger has been thicker than Grant's loins toward the South? The President has used with the greatest moderation the unlimited power conferred by Congress, and has steadily advocated amnesty. Mr. Sumner has been foremost in establishing arbitrary power; and has hindered amnesty more than any other man. His position now, compared with his record, is as incongruous, as absurd, as the suppliest politician ever exhibited.

Mr. Sumner is not a supple nor an unprincipled man; but he is habitually so dominated by a single idea that for the time he sees nothing else. Until lately the controlling idea with him has been the equality of the negro; now it is hostility to Gen. Grant.

Mr. Sumner's present position traces directly back to the San Domingo matter. For his instrumentality in defeating the annexation, we believe the country is grateful to him. But his manner of doing it was most unfortunate. From the first it took the form of a bitter personal attack on the President. Mr. Sumner denounced Gen. Grant in terms appropriate to the worst of usurpers. He kept no limits in his language; his rhetoric was fervid with wrath and denunciation. Brutus could not have said harder things of Cæsar than Mr. Sumner said of the President. The country, which supported him in his opposition to the annexation, never supported him in imputing to Gen. Grant willful, criminal usurpation.

Then came Mr. Sumner's deposition from the Chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee. He had filled that position ably; his friends like to say that he had been the virtual Secretary of State. Was it possible, with the gravest questions pending, that the President and the real Secretary should cease to meet, as representative of the co-ordinate treaty-making power, a man at once accustomed to dictate, and intensely hostile to the President and hostile to the Secretary? Was it strange that the majority of Republican Senators preferred the harmonious working of the Government in such a matter to the personal dignity of Charles Sumner?

Of the attacks on the President by which Mr. Sumner has signalized himself during the last few months we have spoken as they occurred. They have been full to the brim of the exaggeration, the partisanship, the bitterness, which we expect from the campaign paper, but not from fair and judicious men. Mr. Sumner has heaped on the President accusations which, were the half of them true, would mark the American people as imbecile for submitting so long to such a tyrant. He has raked up the records of corruption since the world began for comparisons and illustrations of the baseness of our President. And this, of the soldier of the Wilderness and Richmond! Thus, of the modest, manly, faithful servant of the Republic!

The American people resent such injustice. Not all Mr. Sumner's past services, not his learning nor ability nor sufferings in the cause of freedom, will win to him the sympathy of the nation, when he thus passes from the statesman into the partisan; when he leaves the party with which he has hitherto acted out of bitter, unmeasured hostility to a chief whom the nation respects and trusts.

Opening of the Twentieth Ward Wigwam —An Enthusiastic Meeting.

The Twentieth Ward Republicans, of Brooklyn, having built a commodious wigwam at the intersection of Fulton and Cumberland streets, had an enthusiastic "house-warming" last evening, when the dedicatory meeting was held. The assemblage, among whom were many ladies, was called to order by the President of the Association, Rev. B. E. Hall. Mr. T. C. Cronin was the first speaker. He said that they dedicated the building to the cause of humanity and freedom, to the party of justice, not to the party of vituperation and dissatisfaction, and that as a people we wanted neither a change of measures nor of men, and alluded to the advantages of Gen. Grant's re-election. He also alluded to the effort of the scoreheads to force the issue of religion into the State campaign, and said that no man should be elected or rejected on account of them. No religion or nationality is so weak that we will refuse to shelter them, and none are so powerful that we will fear them. [Applause.]

Gen. Joseph C. Jackson was the next speaker. He said that President Grant was the only man who could receive the vote of the intelligence and honesty of the country for Chief Magistrate.

The speech of Mr. Amos G. Hull, which was listened to attentively, closed the meeting.

FRANCE.

The Finances of the Republic—A Heavy Deficit—Results of High Postal Rates—Injudicious Taxation—Press Views of the Question—The Executive and Baron Stoffel.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Sept. 9, 1872.

It cannot have escaped your notice that the English journals have recently given some very strong articles to the present financial policy of France, denouncing M. Thiers in unpleasant language, and treating him as a wrong-headed old man who is doing his country incalculable harm by his persistence in palpable errors. Whenever the Times speaks so positively and forcibly we may be very sure that it has some special information to justify its words. I felt satisfied, therefore, that we should soon have some indications to show upon what the Times' articles were based, and they are now coming out day by day. If I remember rightly I have already informed you that the Patrie openly declares that there is a deficit of ninety millions in the last indirect taxes. This large figure being challenged by the semi-official organs, and the Patrie's information, discussed with considerable warmth and little amenity, that journal adopted your tactics with the Ring, (to which mention is made by the bye,) staked its reputation upon the figures, repeated them emphatically, and challenged the Government to exhibit its balance-sheet just completed and carefully concealed. The inference is that the Patrie has found some means of getting a transcript of this balance-sheet, or at least that it has been informed "by one who knows" that the deficit is ninety millions. The day after, two or three facts came out tending to show that the balance-sheet would not be produced to refute the assertion thus boldly advanced, and since we have had a curious succession of details, establishing various deficits, which already foot up amazingly strong. It looks now as if the Patrie's figure would be surpassed by five or ten millions, and I fancy one would not be far out of the way in putting the deficit at one hundred millions. We can now understand why the Times spoke so boldly and so confidently upon the subject.

RESULTS OF HIGH POSTAL RATES.

In order to comprehend this matter fully, one must take a glance at a few of the details before regarding it as a whole from a Government point of view. The English have demonstrated by that best of all modes, practical experience, that a high rate of postage produces a smaller income to the Postal Department than a moderate postal tariff. The whole matter was made as clear by Sir Rowland Hill, and has been so eloquently demonstrated since, that there was no room for error, unless it were willful error, or what is worse, an error through self-conceit. There is no ignorance so dangerous to the world as that which comes from the happy belief that one knows a great deal more than all of his neighbors, and hence has no need of their advice or experience. M. Thiers wanted to raise about ten millions of his new impôts from the postal service. In order to accomplish this end he raised the tariff on letters from three to five sous. The first quarter after the war, when there was an enormous correspondence everywhere, the results seemed encouraging. The second quarter showed a considerable falling off. Then there was a deficit of three millions, and now we are informed that the last quarter's deficit in the Postal Department was five millions of francs. In order to follow his policy logically, M. Thiers must now raise his postage from five to seven sous, or else he must change his policy for a better. He is now, in front of this dilemma, and it will be not a little curious to see which road he will take.

INJUDICIOUS TAXATION.

Here is one item, therefore, showing a deficit of, say twelve or fifteen millions a year, and we can go still lower for other examples. The tax upon lucifer matches has produced a ridiculously small sum, and one which may be counted as nothing in comparison with the four millions expected. During the four or five months between the presentation of this law and its passage the manufacturers employed ten men night and day to one of ordinary times, and succeeded in supplying the market for two, and, it is said even four years to come. Besides, the consumption has greatly decreased. None of the Parisian cafés now place boxes of matches upon their tables, and when a customer wants a light the waiter hands him a lighted bit of paper. Another item is not less curious. Formerly a license to shoot game cost twenty-five francs a year, and the number of licenses taken out increased annually. M. Thiers wished to profit by this also, and so raised the price to forty francs a year. The result was an immediate decline of one-sixth, and a rapid decline in the future is as certain as the rise under the former rule. In 1869 the receipts, at twenty-five francs the license or permit, amounted to 9,550 francs for the City of Paris alone. During 1871 they fell to 5,990, or a diminution of 4,000 francs. This year only 1,159 permits have been taken out, which gives us a clear loss to the State of seven thousand francs. It must be remembered that this sum represents but one-half of the real loss, for the tax upon powder, shot, guns, dogs, and other things necessary to the sportsman is very high. But the greatest loss has been sustained in tobacco, the Government being utterly unable to prevent smuggling on a large scale when the premium offered to the smuggler is between six and seven hundred per cent. The only way the Government can hold its own is by making very poor tobacco, adulterated with leaves or kelp, and this process is—or seems to me to be—decidedly immoral. Not less so is the premium put upon the adulteration of wines by the high octroi duties. A fifty per cent. revenue tax upon wines grown but a few miles from Paris seems something outrageous, and is very much like paying fifty per cent. of its value on Westchester County milk and butter allowed to enter New-York.

PRESS VIEWS.

Several French writers are becoming outspoken upon this topic, and none more so than M. Michel Chevalier, whose competence in such matters is beyond dispute. In the Presse, he examines the question: "Is the law on raw materials likely to live?" and comes to the conclusion that it must inevitably be abandoned at no distant period. The commercial treaties now existing raise insuperable barriers to the success of this mode of taxation, for while M. Thiers can denounce the treaty with England, he does not find it so easy to deal with other nations. Switzerland and Austria have both declared that they will not consent to any modification of their treaties, and since Germany has to be treated on the footing of the most favored nation, the whole Eastern frontier is open to trade on terms which kill completely the tax in question. M. Thiers has simply shut off trade with England to give it to Germany, and instead of entering by the port of Havre, English products have to go by the way of Germany, the French consumer paying the extra charge. This he can do and yet save a good sum on the cost when bought on the terms made by his own Government. It will be seen from this that it is impressively binding upon M. Thiers to get rid of the treaties with Belgium, Switzerland and Italy, before he can gain a sou by his tax. M. Chevalier says that he "threatened Switzerland with an armed intervention if she would not accept his interpretation of the commercial treaties between the two countries;" but, he adds, the plan of making war upon Switzerland had to be abandoned when it was found that she was backed by Germany, who could not see Switzerland whipped out of her present treaty without great injury to German trade and industry. There seems to be no possible way of getting out of the dilemma except by a speedy return to the commercial policy of Napoleon III., and the matter has become urgent. As this tax was made by the votes of the sol-disant Republicans, you can judge what kind of patriots and Republicans they are.

THE EXECUTIVE AND BARON STOFFEL.

A new quarrel has arisen which gives occupation for the moment and promises entertainment for the future. A short time ago Col. Baron Stoffel, who wrote the remarkable reports on the German Army before the war, received a note from the Secretary of War, asking him to present his papers in order to show his right to being retired. As Baron Stoffel did not wish to be retired he refused to do anything of the kind, and was then informed that it was by order of M. Thiers personally. The journals got hold of the matter, and some rich developments have been made. It will be remembered that Baron Stoffel published his reports in a book form, adding a preface written in very forcible French, telling some uncommonly disagreeable truths about the mess of September, and even contradicted M. Thiers. This was an audacity which could not be pardoned. M. Thiers had boasted in his proclamations that his artillery had breached the walls of Paris, making a way for the troops to enter. Not one word was said of the brave Ducatel. Baron Stoffel asserted with proof in hand that no breach was made in the walls, and that the troops entered by one of the gates opened for them by one courageous, devoted and patriotic man, who did not have the satisfaction of receiving a "thank you." On the contrary, he was treated as an impertinent who had dared to interfere in the work of Gen. Thiers, and no mention was made of him until the Figaro started a public subscription for him. From that time to this Baron Stoffel has been "waiting orders," and he was still waiting when asked (or ordered, one may say, since such requests mean commands,) to retire. The best military critic of Paris, M. Wachter, of the Soir, formerly an able officer of the army, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, says that the order is due solely to "petty vengeance" on the part of M. Thiers, who would have ordered Baron Stoffel to resign immediately after the publication of his book but for fear of making himself ridiculous, and hence had to wait for some excuse. It was supposed that one was found when the second edition appeared, under the law making it an offense in an officer to publish a book without the consent of the Secretary for War. Baron Stoffel was called to account, and presented a regular authorization signed by Gen. Le Flo. Nothing could be said in the face of that, but Baron Stoffel soon committed another offense, and M. Wachter asserts that this is the excuse seized upon for getting rid of him: The Baron had the audacity to attend the funeral of his late friend the Duc de Persigney. The clamors of the Press seem to have stopped further proceedings for the moment, but there is no doubt of his fall. He is too able a man to be tolerated, and besides he has an unfortunate habit of telling disagreeable truths. But, military men will ask, how does M. Thiers get over the law which only retires an officer at sixty, when Baron Stoffel is in the prime of life and perfectly robust, capable and hearty? Indeed, he has barely reached his fifty-third year, having entered upon active service at seventeen, which just completed his term two weeks ago. I need not say that army men are greatly disturbed to find that their positions depend upon the caprice of the President of the Republic.

GEN. SIGEL.

His Views on National Politics—Grant and Wilson Indorsed.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 13, 1872.

Col. L. E. Dudley, Secretary Soldiers' and Sailors' National Committee:

DEAR SIR: Your kind letter inviting me to be present at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention at Pittsburg, on the 17th inst., is received. I remember with pride and pleasure the first great Convention held in that same city in September, 1866, when resolutions were passed indorsing the policy of Congress, and especially the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment by that body. At that time there was no doubt in our mind that certain constitutional guarantees were necessary to prevent reaction, confer American citizenship and create a uniform system of national representation throughout the Republic.

The work of the Convention was good and noble, but it is a remarkable fact that only in 1868, four years afterward, the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, while it took two years more, (March 30, 1870,) before the Fifteenth Amendment, in regard to universal suffrage, was finally adopted.

There was one fierce and continuous political struggle for more than five years after the war was closed. Congress, in the Press, on the stump, and in every nook and corner of the land, surpassing in its earnestness and grandeur even the great debates of the French Revolution, when the "rights of man" were discussed and declared. Of course, before the new basis of the future life of the Union was established, there was not and could not be peace and harmony between the North and South. This at least was the opinion of those very men who now go back on their own acts by disavowing as tyrannical and unnecessary the very means, without which no such basis would exist at the present time. If anything is absurd it is this absurdity of accusing and defaming the executive instruments of their own self-divined plans and purposes, and to curse the children of their own love. If anything is unjust it is the endeavor of taking a man to account for official acts which were forced upon him by Congressional legislation, instead of political ostracism and military rule in the South after the war were neither proposed nor inaugurated by Gen. Grant. If there is treachery it is this indirect appeal to the South to revolt against the passed policy of the Government, on which today rest the unity, the security and liberty of the Republic!

As in 1861, so we are now again on the defensive—not against a formidable enemy in the field—but, against a coalition which we distrust, as it is influenced by ambition, and disappointments, and tends to the revival of questions which we regarded as settled. Under the profession of reconciliation, amnesty and reform, with nothing to stand upon except nicely-framed platforms and pronunciamentos, this strange alliance of Guelphs and Ghibellines tries to put its double-faced policy into practice. We cannot trust to great moral professions. We cannot intrust ourselves to a house divided in itself and built on sand. We cannot intrust the most sacred rights, interests and liberties of the American people to a coalition which is not based on real facts and deeds, and above all suspicion and apprehension to undo, or change, or cripple what was attained by a terrible struggle, and paid for by the best blood of our people and milliards of dollars.

For these reasons, and others of secondary consideration, I cannot be in favor of the Cincinnati nominees, but shall stand with you on the side of Grant and Wilson.

But while I am in their favor, I hope to see in their election not a mere personal and temporary triumph. I hope that abuses, where they exist, will be abolished; perfect harmony between the North and South restored by wise measures of conciliation and material support; that civil service reform will be extended and perfected by recognizing the right of the whole people, without difference of party, to be represented in the administration of offices, and that the soldiers and sailors of the Union will be, as they have always been, the most zealous and faithful supporters of our civil Government, the Constitution and laws of the American Republic.

Very respectfully and truly yours,

F. SIGEL.

Verdict of $100 in a Breach of Promise Suit.

From the Lockport Journal, Sept. 13.

The Supreme Court now in session here has been occupied for two days past in the trial of an interesting breach of promise suit. It was that of Ellen Furmoul against Timothy Bray. Both parties reside at Middleport. The plaintiff alleges that an engagement of marriage existed between her and Timothy Bray; that he had been paying his addresses to her some eighteen months; that they had frequently taken evening walks together; that he had made her presents at sundry times during the period of their intimacy, such as a gold ring, exchanging pictures, &c., and that he told her frequently that if he ever married any one he would marry her. The defendant claimed that he told the plaintiff at a certain time during the alleged intimacy that while he held her in high esteem, his circumstances were such that he did not desire to get married, and that he wished she would consider any attention he had shown her as of friendship, and not those with a view to marriage. This, Timothy Bray claims, was the understanding between them. And further, the promise made that if the defendant ever married any one he would marry Ellen Furmoul, or itself was not a valid contract. The testimony on both sides was contradictory. The jury remained out all night, and until 11 o'clock today, when they came into court, finding for the plaintiff a verdict of one hundred dollars.

Death of Hon. John Kent, of Newfoundland.

Hon. John Kent was found dead in his bed in St. Johns, N. F., on the morning of the 2d inst. A correspondent of the Montreal Witness writes: "The cause of death is believed to have been either apoplexy or disease of the heart. He had just returned the evening before from St. Peter's, and appeared to be in his usual health. Mr. Kent is one of our veteran politicians, having for the last quarter of a century taken an active share in public affairs. He was an eloquent public speaker, and possessed of superior abilities as a statesman. He took the popular or liberal side in politics, and aided in securing responsible government for the colony. For several years previous to 1861 he held the position of Premier. In that year, owing partly to a misunderstanding with Gov. Bannerman, his Government was overthrown, and Mr. Hoyles (now Chief-Justice) succeeded him. When Mr. Hoyles soon was seen on the Bench, Mr. Kent joined Mr. Carter's Government, and was one of the advocates for Confederation. In 1869 he did not take the field as a candidate, and consequently had no seat in the present House of Assembly. Mr. Kent's death is deeply regretted. He was universally respected for his integrity, while the kindness of his disposition and his genial humor won him a wide circle of friends."

ENGLAND'S ARMY.

The Autumn Manœuvres—A Night March—The People and the Forces.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 7, 1872.

The Autumn manœuvres are still going on, and attract a good deal of attention. The invader is supposed to have effected a landing at Weymouth, and to be marching upon London; but the forces actually engaged represent only the advanced portions of the opposing armies. In the "general idea" of the operations which is given out by the War Office, the invader is assumed to be established in force at Dorchester and Bridgwood, and his movements on this side of England (where he has nominally some fifty thousand men at his disposal) are subsidiary to a main invasion on the eastern or south-eastern coast. While one English army is resisting the latter, another and smaller army has been dispatched to meet the advance of the enemy from the south-west. The conflict rages round the old cathedral town of Salisbury, which is the centre of a strong position held by the advanced portion of the defending force. Salisbury Plain, a few miles from the town, is a vast level prairie, given up to the pasturage of sheep, and this will be the scene of one or more great pitched battles which will decide the struggle. For the present the action of the troops has been mainly confined to the country on each side of the river Wiley—rather a wild, rolling country with abrupt valleys, defiles and grassy dells. On Tuesday the two armies were each drawn out in front of their respective bases of operations, one on one side of the Wiley, one on the other. The "general idea" informed the commanders that, subject to the suppositions I have already mentioned, they had full liberty of action, with one restriction, namely, that neither force must cross the Wiley before 4 A. M. on the morning of the 6th of September. It was added that "in naming this date no reference is made to the movements of the cavalry and horse artillery."

A NIGHT MARCH.

Sir Robert Walpole, the chief of the Northern, or defending, army, construed this to mean that he must not move his infantry before 4 A. M., but that he could push on with his cavalry at an earlier hour if he chose. He, therefore, resolved upon a forced night march with his horse and guns to seize the fords of the Wiley. It will be remembered how puzzled the French were, in the late war, at the miraculous knowledge the Germans seemed to have of all the roads in France. In the present case the English Army was utterly ignorant of the ground over which it had to go to reach the river, had to trust blindly to one of the farmers to guide it, and even with this help repeatedly went wrong. To be sure it was pitch dark, one of the darkest of nights, with not even a star visible. But still armies have occasionally to march in the dark, and it is not very encouraging to think of one's gallant defenders not knowing their way through their own country. There are excellent maps of the country on a very large scale, with highways and byways carefully marked, but it would appear that they are not studied by the English officers. The column of cavalry and artillery started soon after midnight. For several miles the road was straight and all went well; but afterward it was found that a cross-road had been missed, and the troops had to be countermarched—a troublesome and dangerous operation, in a narrow road, full of horses, on a dark night. The troopers could hardly see the heads of their own horses, far less the horse in front. A storm of rain and lightning broke in the middle of the night. This fidgetted the horses, but then it helped to show the way. Now at a trot, now at a fast walk, the plunging column winds its way, rousing the sleeping villages as it passed. After a time it was discovered that the column had parted in two. Where the head of it had gone nobody knew, and the hinder part of it was left standing disconsolate and bewildered, doubting which way to take. It had wandered into the great plain of Salisbury, and there seemed no reason why it should move in one direction more than another. Again there was a weary and tedious countermarching. The General and his staff rode off into the dense night to seek for traces of the head of the dislocated, or rather decapitated, column. Flashes of lightning lit up the scene, and only made the darkness visible. The buglers sounded the call for the missing men, and every ear was strained for the echo—vainly for a time. But the call was kept up, and presently a faint, bleating response to it was heard from afar. The staff rode upon the sound, which grew nearer and nearer, and ultimately the lost regiment was found. In the early morning the river was reached, and the fords taken possession of. It was a complete surprise for the Southern Army, who pleaded that they did but understand that they were liable to an attack at that hour. The authorities supported this view, and the Northerners, much to their chagrin and disappointment, had to retire for some miles. Next day the struggle for the river was resumed, the chief incidents being keen cavalry charges, some of them in the face of grape-shot, and rifle-musketry, highly absurd, or if it had been real warfare, suicidal; and yesterday there was more fighting. The invaders made their way across the river, but did not establish themselves on the opposite heights to the satisfaction of the umpires—so they had again to retire. It is wonderful how keen the feelings of the troops are on these points, and there is a good deal of resentment and ill feeling on both sides at some of the decisions which have been given. Indeed, in one of the armies the practice of setting divisions against each other had to be given up on this account. The Generals are also very bitter against the newspaper correspondents, whom they accuse of ignorance and favoritism. All this may be good practice for the army, but it is evidently rather trying to its temper. Although there is a pretense of leaving a good deal to the discretion of the rival commanders, there is a kind of private arrangement as to where striking incidents are to occur, and the invaders know that it is their preordained doom to be rolled back to the ocean.

THE PEOPLE AND THE ARMY.

Two discoveries have been made in the course of the manœuvres. The troops have been astonished at the extent of wild, open country still left in England. The same observations were made last year near London, where there are still vast heaths almost as bare and desolate as any in the Highlands. The cry that is sometimes raised by radical agitators for the reclamation of waste lands is not altogether without grounds, though it is a question whether, under the peculiar circumstances of the nation, leaving the lands waste and open is not, perhaps, the best thing for everybody. On the other hand, the population of the districts under military occupation are surprised to find that the soldiers are such a quiet, steady, respectable set of men, who speak civilly, pay for what they want, and do not rob the hen-roosts, or meddle with the girls. Hitherto, though Englishmen have been proud of their army from a military point of view, they have not had a high opinion of it in its personal aspects. The "drunken grenadier" has passed into a popular proverb, and among the working classes, especially the agricultural class, it is thought to be ruin for a young fellow to enlist as a soldier. Except in certain garrison towns, troops are never seen, and the consequence has been a reversal of the saying about things unknown being taken for magnificent. I suppose the ideas on the subject are traditional of an earlier period, when the soldier verified the bad reputation attributed to him. These maneuvres, and the new plan of identifying the different regiments with particular neighborhoods, can hardly fail to establish more cordial relations between the army and the people, and to help recruiting.

Romantic Marriage of an Indiana Young Lady.

From the Indianapolis Journal.

An Indianapolis lady, Miss Christie Muirson, daughter of Alexander Muirson, Esq., was recently married at Sacramento, Cal., under rather romantic circumstances. The gentleman to whom she was engaged, Mr. Horace S. Wright, formerly of Rock Island, went to San Jose, Cal., something over a year ago, intending to return and claim his bride within a year, but a pressure of business prevented his coming at the appointed time, and Miss Muirson consented to make the trip alone. She left here some weeks ago, and, after a short stay with a married sister in Denver, resumed her journey across the continent, meeting her lover in Sacramento, where they were at once married, and from whence they at once proceeded to Mr. Wright's ranche, near San Jose. It is a singular coincidence that Miss Muirson's mother, when about the present age of her daughter, crossed the Atlantic Ocean alone from Scotland, and was married to Mr. Muirson in New-York City immediately on her arrival.

THE IMPERIAL MEETING.

The Three Emperors in Berlin—Sights and Incidents of the First Interview.

Telegraphing from Berlin on Sept. 5, the London Daily Telegraph correspondent says: "His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia arrived here this afternoon, and was received with the highest marks of official respect and popular applause. Berlin was not decorated as Paris or London would have been on a similar occasion. Indeed, throughout the whole distance between the King's Palace and the Ostbahnhof, some two miles, there were few flags to be seen, and business was not in the least degree suspended. Still there was sufficient demonstration that the people in the Prussian capital regarded the event as one of great political importance, as one could gather from the remark I heard often repeated: 'If Russia and Germany were allied nothing more would be heard of French vengeance.' All through the morning small knots, of whom Berlin is full, had to content themselves with watching the trooping of the colors at the King's Palace. This takes place at 11 o'clock, when there is a full company of infantry on a peace footing, numbering 156 rank and file, exclusive of officers and drum and fife bands. The regimental band goes on to the King's Palace, into which the colors are carried with every military honor. After the infantry ceremony the cavalry bring their colors, with like observance. Between 10 and 11 o'clock the Emperor of Germany and the Crown Prince, both looking exceedingly well, drove from the King's Palace in a small open carriage and pair up Unter den Linden. They were everywhere greeted with the utmost respect, but there was no cheering. Almost immediately after they had returned to the Palace, the Emperor was visited by Prince Bismarck, who is evidently a great favorite with the Berlin people. Toward 1 o'clock crowds of sight-seers began to gather in the streets leading to the Ostbahnhof, where the Emperor of Russia was to arrive. By half-past 1 every available spot in the Kaestriner Platz, which is a large open space in front of the station, was crowded, and every window commanding a view was occupied. The sun was burning fiercely, and the dense mass of people must have suffered from the almost tropical heat. Order was kept without the slightest difficulty by a strong body of mounted and foot police, who, in appearance, were the equal to the Household Brigade. Great military and Court dignitaries began to arrive at half-past 1, and from that time they were driving up in rapid succession. All were in full uniform, and were almost, without exception, covered with decorations. The spectators were not slow to recognize the particulators in the recent campaigns. The Emperor and the Crown Prince were now greeted with enthusiastic cheering. At 1¾ o'clock the Fourth Guards, with colors flying and bands playing, marched up and entered the station to act as a guard of honor. The royal carriages, with their horses and riders, drew up at the entrance of the station, and everybody waited with the greatest interest the moment when the two Emperors should appear. Within the station the gathering presented an unusually brilliant aspect, even for Berlin, where courtly and military spectacles are of frequent occurrence. The whole Court was present, but, of course, no diplomatic personages save those of Russia. All the familiar faces of the Grand General Staff at the Versailles Prefecture were to be seen here. The stalwart forms seemed less familiar to the eye, because so many of the royal and princely warriors were attired in uniforms foreign to the Fatherland—the Emperor in scarlet trousers, and wearing a blue riband, the Crown Prince in dark green and silver; Prince Frederick Charles, the red Hussar, in a Cossack Lancer uniform of strange cut and florid ornamentation. The Grand Duke of Baden was in the guise of a red-breasted Uhlan. Prince Carl travestied as a Russian General, and a host of other august personages en masquerade militaire, made a spectacle curious and puzzling in the extreme. The venerable Wrangel and the Duke Ernest Saxe-Coburg, who has got very stout, stuck to the white and gold and heavy steel helmets. In all about seventy officers of high rank, besides the great State dignitaries and the members of the Russian Embassy—except the Russian Ambassador—who left Berlin last night to meet the Czar at the frontier, were in attendance, all in grand gala, and wearing German and Russian decorations. The hall and Imperial waiting-room of the station were profusely decorated with exotics and Russian colors. The great Imperial Russian escutcheon was displayed on either side of the portal leading from the platform to the grand saloon, and was guarded by two gigantic grenadiers of the Fourth Guards—the regiment honored with the custody of the station, and supplying the guard of honor. A whole company, with its drums and fifes, and the full regimental band were drawn up on the platform, and were inspected by his Majesty before the arrival of the train. At 2 o'clock precisely the Emperor of Russia, attended by the Grand Officers of his Household, the Court Marshals in scarlet and gold, arrived at the station. Shortly afterward the Czar caught the Emperor's hand and made an effort as if to fall over it, but the Emperor caught him in his embrace and kissed him heartily three or four times, after which they both stood for a moment holding each other's hands. Then the Princes were embraced by the Grand Duke, and the greetings between the Czar and the Royal family were of the warmest character. The Emperor led the Czar from the right to the left of the guard of honor, and his Russian Majesty expressed his high admiration of the splendid physique and drill of the men. Next the Emperor presented to the Czar the General Staff officers, with whom the Czar shook hands and, smiling, said a few friendly words to each. His Majesty looks well and strong, and much tanned by exposure to the sun, and it seemed as if the Emperor could scarcely restrain his gladness and exultation. I never saw the Emperor William look so happy. After the presentations the two Emperors, followed by their staffs, walked quickly from the platform, a carriage and four awaiting them. The Czar got in first and took the place of honor. Then came the Crown Prince. The same order was observed with the Czarewich. Prince Carl sat with the Grand Duke Vladimar, Grand Duke Frederick Charles with the Grand Duke of Baden. As the Emperor drove off amid great cheering, raised by crowds outside the station, the party arrived at the Royal Palace, Unter den Linden, when the whole Imperial party alighted to pay respects to the Empress and Princesses. Their visit only lasted ten minutes. The Palace was guarded by Uhlans of the Czar's Regiment. Thorough and hearty cheering greeted the visitors. Their Majesties again got into their carriage and drove up the Linden to the Russian Palace, where a guard of honor was stationed with full band. There was an enthusiastic reception by the populace. The dinner at Babelsberg on Sunday will be strictly en famille, but is ordered for eighty covers. The Royal chefs have swept the markets of all the good things to be found, and private dinner parties are physically impossible."

THE INTERNATIONAL.

Fresh Facts and Figures from German Sources.

A new History of the International, in German, has appeared at Leipzig. The anonymous author professes to furnish from authentic sources accurate details as to the work of the association in the various countries of Europe and elsewhere. Before the events of 1870 he estimates the number of members of the International in France at from 40,000 to 50,000. Now that it is subjected to exceptional penalties, and all connection with it has been declared illegal by the National Assembly, it is impossible to estimate the number. In England, though London is the head-quarters of Karl Marx, the working classes are not enthusiastic about the association, and there are not perhaps above 8,000 members paying the subscriptions, though a large number of the English trade societies are in friendly relations with it for purely trade purposes. The managing leaders of the general council are mostly French and German, and are the authors of the subversive programmes which threaten modern society and property. The number of Internationalists in Belgium has been much exaggerated—placed variously at 200,000, 120,000 and 60,000. In reality, toward the middle of 1870 the subscribing members were only about 12,000, and there may be as many more non-subscribers, making the total from 20,000 to 25,000. Very many of these only look on the International as a trade organization, and have no sympathy with the extreme theories of Karl Marx. There are ten groups or federations in Belgium in the different large towns, and in 1870 there existed at Montpay-sur-Sambre a female section, presided over by Leonie Bevarewere, or Andres. However, the working population of the large towns have not hitherto shown any great enthusiasm for the International. Out of 50,000 workmen at Gand, only 1,500 were members in September, 1871.

Remarkable Longevity.

A West Virginia correspondent says: "Lincoln County claims the honor of having the most remarkable case of longevity in the State of West Virginia. The individual alluded to is Mr. Silas Cooper, who was born in what is now Greenbrier County, on the 9th day of March, 1766; making him one hundred and six years old last March. This old gentleman lives five miles from Lincoln Court-house. He makes a trip to the Court-house about once a week; comes and goes alone; mounts and dismounts from his horse without assistance. He is quicker on foot than many men who are only fifty years old. This old gentleman in his youthful days became in Miss Lucy Martin, who died on the 8th of March last, at the ripe old age of one hundred and ten years.

OHIO CONGRESSMEN.

Probable Result of the Election in the Various Congressional Districts.

From Our Special Correspondent.

COLUMBUS, Monday, Sept. 16, 1872.

As the State offices to be filled at the October election, in Ohio, are unimportant, but little interest is excited by the State ticket, and the attention is generally centered upon the contest for members of Congress. The State was redistricted by the last Legislature under the the apportionment of 1872, the new arrangement giving twenty districts, of which fifteen gave Republican and five Democratic majorities at the election of last year, but of the former five gave majorities under 1,000. The First District embraces the eastern portion of Cincinnati and Hamilton County, and the territory gave a small Republican majority last year. As the district now includes a ward of the city which is good for 250 Republican majority, Hon. Bellamy Storer, who is an indefatigable politician, is reasonably sure of his election. His Democratic competitor is Mr. Sayler.

The Second District includes the western portion of Cincinnati and Hamilton County, and gave about 800 Republican majority last year. It has in it the bulk of the Republican disaffection in the county, but Ex-Gov. Hayes, the Republican nominee, is one of the strongest men in the State, and his election is considered certain. There is also a member to be chosen here for the unexpired portion of the present Congress, and the election of Charles P. Taft, the Republican candidate, is conceded.

The Third District comprises the counties of Butler, Clinton, Fayette and Warren, which gave last year a Republican majority of 1,469. The Republican candidate is Hon. John Quincy Smith, his competitor being John H. Sohn, a Greeley Republican. The coalition are counting largely on Sohn's election, but he has not the slightest chance, notwithstanding he is rich and personally popular. There is more Democratic repugnance to "crow" in Butler County than anywhere else in the State, and Smith will be returned by 1,500 majority.

The Fourth District embraces the counties of Darke, Preble, Montgomery and Greene, which gave 786 majority for Noyes last Fall. The Republican candidate is Hon. L. D. Gunkle, and his election is claimed by 1,000 majority, notwithstanding his competitor is J. J. Winans, a Liberal Republican.

The Fifth District includes the counties of Defiance, Paulding, Putnam, Van Wert, Allen, Auglaize, Mercer and Shelby, which gave 5,333 Democratic majority last year, so that the district is certain to elect some Democrat who has not yet been nominated.

The Sixth District is made up of the counties of Williams, Fulton, Henry, Wood, Lucas and Ottawa, giving 1,604 majority for Noyes. The election of Gen. Isaac R. Sherwood, the Republican candidate, over Hon. Frank Hurd, Democrat, is not disputed, except by some idiotic "per cent." calculators.

The Seventh District is constituted by the counties of Brown, Highland, Adams, Pike and Ross, giving a Democratic majority of 1,588 in 1871. The Republican candidate is Hon. John T. Wilson, the efficient member for the old Eleventh District, who is a very popular man, and his election is claimed by some of his friends. The chances, however, are decidedly with Hon. L. T. Neal, the Democratic nominee.

The Eighth District has the counties of Madison, Clarke, Miami, Logan and Champaign, in which Noyes had 3,433 majority. That staunch and able Republican, Hon. William Lawrence, is the candidate of his party, and sure of the seat.

The Ninth District includes the counties of Hardin, Marion, Delaware, Union, Morrow and Knox, wherein Noyes had 1,066 majority. The Republican candidate is Hon. J. W. Robinson, and he will be elected over Hon. Geo. W. Morgan, a present member, who has been put into this Republican District by the new apportionment.

The Tenth District has the counties of Hancock, Seneca, Sandusky, Erie and Huron, in which Noyes had 532 majority. The district is now admitted to be doubtful, but the Republican candidate is Hon. Charles Foster, who carried the old Ninth when there was a Democratic majority of 1,700 to overcome, and he certainly has an equal chance with his competitor, Hon. Rush R. Sloane. There is, however, some Republican disaffection, and if any Republican district is lost it will be this.

The Eleventh District has the counties of Hocking, Vinton, Jackson, Scioto, Lawrence and Gallia, giving Noyes 1,432 majority last year. The election of Hon. H. S. Bundy, the Republican nominee, is not denied by any one not demented by a protracted contemplation of per cents.

The Twelfth District includes the counties of Franklin, Pickaway, Fairfield and Perry, giving a Democratic majority of 4,044 last year. Hon. H. J. Jewett, the Democratic candidate, and now a member, cannot be beaten by Col. James Taylor, Republican nominee.

The Thirteenth District is made up of the Counties of Licking, Muskingum, Coshocton and Tuscarawas, where the Democrats had 2,454 majority at the last election. Mr. Southard will be elected over Hon. L. P. Marsh, his Republican competitor.

The Fourteenth District is also Democratic, comprising the counties of Wyandot, Crawford, Richland, Ashland and Holmes, giving a Democratic majority of 3,740 last year. The chances are decidedly with Mr. Perry, and against Col. Thomas E. Douglass, the Republican candidate.

The Fifteenth District is admitted to be close, as the counties of Meigs, Athens, Morgan, Monroe and Washington of which it is composed, gave only 843 Republican majority last year. The election of Hon. W. P. Sprague as the Republican candidate is, however, confidently claimed over Hon. E. R. Hudson, a Greeley Republican.

The Sixteenth District is made up of the counties of Jefferson, Harrison, Belmont, Guernsey and Noble, giving 2,522 majority for Noyes. Hon. L. Danford is the Republican nominee, and will be chosen over Col. C. C. Poorman, a Greeleyized Republican.

The Seventeenth District embraces the counties of Carroll, Stark, Columbiana and Mahoning, giving Noyes 2,293 majority, and Hon. L. D. Woodworth, Republican, will be chosen over Richard Brown.

The Eighteenth District has in it the counties of Lorain, Medina, Wayne and Summit, wherein Noyes had 3,004 majority; Hon. James Monroe, Republican, is certain of election.

The Nineteenth District is composed of the counties of Ashtabula, Trumbull, Geauga, Portage and Lake, in which Noyes had 9,840. The Greeleyites have not thought it worth while to run any one against Hon. James A. Garfield.

The Twentieth District has only the county of Cuyahoga, in which is the City of Cleveland. It gave Noyes 5,967 majority, and Hon. R. C. Parsons, the Republican candidate, is certain to be returned.

A GENERAL VIEW.

It will be seen that while the Republicans claim fifteen districts, they are sure of thirteen, and the Democrats cannot be certain of but five, and that therefore the Greeley coalition do not have a very cheerful outlook in Ohio. It is true they claim a great deal more. A recent letter in the Tribune allows the Republicans the Sixth, Eighth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth, and gives the Greeleyites the First, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth, leaving the Second, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Twentieth in doubt, with the chances of success, of course with the coalitionists. This extraordinary result is attained by the simple process of peopling the districts by myriads of supposititious Greeley Republicans. The Democrats have played the sinful game of allowing the Greeley Republicans the nominee in every district having a Republican majority, but have been careful to have one of their own party up in every district where his election is certain. This was supposed to be very adroit, as it was alleged that the apostate Republicans would get many votes from former political friends and with the Democratic strength might be elected. But the Greeley Republicans are beginning to see that while they have been given all the chances the Democrats have taken all the certainties, and there is much bitterness in consequence. Hard work and plenty of it can give the Republicans certainly fifteen, possibly seventeen of the members, but without such work they will get not more than thirteen, and some of them by a close shave. As I close I hear of indications that Ohio is about to be "shaken up," that done, everything is safe.

POMPEII AND VESUVIUS.

A correspondent of the Athenæum writes from Naples, on the 28th ult: "I have to report a discovery which was made three weeks ago in Pompeii. A glass bottle, well closed, has been found of oil in its natural state, the first and only relic of the kind that has as yet been turned up. Eggs and bread, and bread and grain rather overcooked, may be seen in the museums of Naples and Pompeii, also large oil-jars, and receptacles for it in the shops; but such a discovery brings us almost into the interior of a Pompeian household. It was some precious stuff, perhaps, well sealed up in reserve for salads, which demands the finest oil. It may have been a sample. Whatever it was, it throws us into almost life-communication with the thrifty family who were destroyed by the eruption of Vesuvius. It has been submitted to the examination of Prof. Palmieri, who was astonished at the marvelous preservation of the liquid, pure and clear as amber, and who declared it to be olive-oil without any extraneous matter. The recipient has the form of a large bottle, similar to those which are commonly found among us from the Greek to the Roman times, and would contain about three chilogrammes of oil, equal to six or seven pounds weight. The contents are not, however, all liquid, for there is a portion, perhaps about the third part of the bottle, concealed, which has the consistency of virgin wax. Solid and inodorous, this residuum has no oleaginous matter in it, say the experts. It is, as I have said, the first time that this liquid has been found in Pompeii in such abundance and so well preserved, for the reason, perhaps, that the bottle was hermetically closed with a cork and wax. On its being moved this stopper fell into the oil in a pulverized state, as also the material with which it was covered. The examination by Prof. Palmieri was not a chemical one—this is reserved for Prof. de Luca to make, who will examine more minutely the qualities of the oil, which has rather an offensive smell, and of what that matter consists which lies at the bottom of the bottle in a concrete state.

At length more attention is being given to the project for the establishment of a superior school of agriculture in Portici. The palace and gardens, one of those royal possessions in Italy lying perfectly unutilized, have been appropriated to a valuable and necessary purpose, having regard to the great importance of agriculture in this country, and so a college or school has been formed. The Minister of Agriculture has given notice of a competitive examination for the selection of candidates to fill three chairs. These are

7 Per Cent. Gold Bonds,

HAVING 50 YEARS TO RUN, PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN, "not inferior to the present standard." Interest payable semi-annually in New-York, on the 1st day of June and December, and guaranteed jointly and severally by

The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad Company,

The Pennsylvania Company, and

The Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company.

The road is entirely completed and in operation, and extends from Fort Wayne, Indiana, to Richmond, 90 miles in the State of Indiana, and connects the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne, and Chicago Railway, the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad, and the whole system of roads under the control of the Pennsylvania Company in Indiana and Michigan, with the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton Railroad to Cincinnati and Southern Ohio and Indiana. The road is leased for 99 years to the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company, and operated by it for the joint account of the guarantors, and by a contract entered into between the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company, the Pennsylvania Company, lessees of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne, and Chicago Railway, and the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton Railroad Company, for reciprocal interchange of business; all these Companies agree to throw all their freight and passenger traffic which may be appropriately done over this road, thus insuring it, from the outset, a large volume of business. The holders of these Bonds are thus trebly secured:

First—By a first mortgage on a finished road now in full operation.

Secondly—By a contract for interchange of business with three prosperous and powerful corporations, controlling in its favor a vast amount of business.

Thirdly—By the direct and absolute guarantee, jointly and severally, by INDORSEMENT ON THE BONDS by the above-mentioned three Companies.

The whole issue of the Bonds is $1,800,000, or $20,000 per mile, and but a limited amount are now offered to investors. Price, 92 1-2 and Interest. Circulars and information furnished by

TWENTY PER CENT. INVESTMENT.

THE AMERICAN BRIDGE CO.,

OF CHICAGO, ILL.,

L. B. BOOMER, of Chicago, President.

(ORGANIZED AUG. 1, 1870.)

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL STOCK, $1,000,000.

The Subscription Books will Positively Close Oct. 1, 1872.

The whole amount of the authorized Capital Stock of this Company not having been issued, the balance will be issued to subscribers at par, payments for the same to be made in four installments of 25 per cent. each, viz.:

Twenty-five per cent. July 15, 25 per cent. Aug. 1, 25 per cent. Sept. 1, and 25 per cent. Oct. 1, 1872. Post due installments to be paid with interest at the time of subscription.

Books now open at the office of the undersigned will be positively closed at 3 P. M., Oct. 1, 1872.

The total amount of full-paid stock issued at this time is $414,700, and on this basis the Company shows a present surplus of $136,280 97, and is now doing a flourishing business. Over 1,000 men are almost constantly employed in their extensive works, and they now have on hand $2,500,000 worth of work for various railroads in the United States, (among which may be mentioned the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, Chicago and North-western, Missouri, Kansas and Texas, Michigan Central, Missouri Pacific, &c., &c.,) and the net profit on this work alone will be over $1,000,000. The Company has built bridge work to the amount of more than $6,000,000, including some of the largest bridges ever built in this country; to accept of which and further business necessitates a large working capital, as immense amounts of material have to be kept constantly on hand, and the Company are frequently obliged to receive in part payment for their work railroad and other bonds, which are perfectly good securities, but not always immediately marketable.

The THIRTY ACRES of land in Chicago belonging to the Company, and on which their extensive machine and car shops are situated, is worth nearly $300,000, and prominent real estate dealers say it will be worth, in six years, at least $1,000,000—an amount equal to the whole proposed issue.

The success of the AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY, though brief, has already fully demonstrated the profitableness of the enterprise. The Company has constructed since its organization, and up to the 31st of December, 1871, a total of 28,137 feet of bridges, 18 turning-tables and 16 iron roofs, and pneumatic and screw pile substructures, costing $3,400,000, and have facilities for the construction of pneumatic pile structures passed by any Company in the country, and a capacity for the construction of at least 150 feet of bridges for every working day in the year.

The iron railroad and highway bridge at Leavenworth, of three spans of 340 feet each, and the Union Pacific Bridge across the Missouri River, of eleven spans of 250 feet each, were constructed by this Company.

The net profit arising from this business, as shown by the books of the Company, up to the 31st of March, 1872, was the sum of $373,489 14, or at the rate of $126,989 28 per annum, or over 30 per cent. upon the capital stock then outstanding. With the proposed new structures, machinery, &c., the Company will have much greater capacity, and the proceeds of the increased issue of stock will enable them to buy material for cash, thereby making a saving of from $50,000 to $75,000 per year.

The Company can undoubtedly, on above basis, make dividends of from 20 to 25 per cent. per annum on the full amount of capital, $1,000,000, with a fair prospect of a considerable increase.

The undersigned are prepared to give to those inquiring the fullest details and entire satisfaction regarding the reliability of the Company's statements, and the unquestioned integrity and ability of its officers.

We confidently commend to capitalists the above as an investment worthy their attention.

THE

AND

CANADA SOUTHERN

First Mortgage Sinking Fund 30 Years

SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS

Interest Payable April and October at the Union Trust Company,

AT 90 AND ACCRUED INTEREST.

This road is the Western link in the new AIR LINE from BUFFALO to CHICAGO and runs from the Detroit River to Chicago in nearly a straight line.

The road is a part of the same line as the Canada Southern and is being built by the same men, viz.: Milton Courtright, John F. Tracy, David Dows, Wm. L. Scott, Henry Farnam, R. A. Forsyth, Jno. M. Burke, M. L. Sykes, Jr., all Directors either in the Chicago and North-west or the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; George Opdyke, of the Midland Road; Sidney Dillon, Daniel Drew, John Ross, David Stewart, Samuel J. Tilden, Kenyon Cox, and other prominent railroad men.

The Road, like the Canada Southern, will have steel rails (60 pounds to the yard) throughout; is STRAIGHT AND LEVEL, MUCH SHORTER, and can be run with greater speed and safety than any other road connecting with Buffalo and Chicago.

The builders of the road control enough of its Chicago feeders to obtain for it a profitable business from the start, having projected the line to accommodate existing business, and having seen the necessity for another trunk line between Chicago and the Atlantic sea-board, located expressly with the view of obtaining the cheapest transportation practicable. Rapid progress is being made in the construction of the Road, and it will be finished at the earliest practicable period.

The branch lines will make the shortest connections between Chicago and Toledo, and Chicago and Detroit, as well as between all these points and Buffalo.

The Canada Southern Bonds, in every particular like these, were eagerly taken, the last of them several weeks ago, by the best class of investors, and were on the market a shorter time than any other railroad loan of like amount for years past.

The proceeds of these bonds will complete the entire line, and we recommend them with the same confidence as we did the Canada Southern, and regard them as in every way a choice security.

of Indiana, which alone will supply an ample business.

Thirty miles through Douglass County, Illinois, just completed, opened and paid for.

Whole Western Division Montezuma to Decatur, eighty-five miles, to be finished in 1872. Grading near completed, and material (except iron) already procured; bridge over Wabash ready for superstructure.

Eastern Division, sixty-seven miles, partly graded, and to be finished in 1873.

$1,300,000 IN CASH ALREADY EXPENDED ON THE ROAD, AND $1,500,000 REMAINING TO BE CALLED FROM TWENTY SUBSCRIBERS, AMONG WHOM ARE THE FOLLOWING, viz.: HENRY DILLON, JAY COOKE & CO., CLARK, DODGE & CO., J. SELIGMAN, VISSERING, FOOTE & CO., AND PULLMAN'S EXPRESS, OF NEW-YORK; BENJ. E. BATES, OF BOSTON; HENRY LEWIS, OF PHILADELPHIA, AND G. M. PULLMAN, OF CHICAGO.

Besides the right of way granted, there are 23,000 acres of land, chiefly in Indiana, of which 2,000 acres are the best BLOCK COAL LANDS. It has also SUBSCRIPTIONS IN BONDS AND CASH from counties, towns and individuals of $700,000.

The road connects at both termini with the most important THROUGH RAILWAY LINES of the West, and being by many miles shorter than any other line, will be indispensable to them, while its local business alone will insure good dividends on its stock.

Bonds $1,000 each, payable to Union Trust Company, New-York, April 1, 1902, in gold coin. Coupons, also in gold, payable Jan. 1 and July 1, in New-York or at Union Bank of London, at fixed exchange of 27 sterling.

At 90 and Accrued Interest.

Issue $20,000 to the mile, in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000 and $5,000. This enterprise is undertaken with subscriptions to the Capital Stock of over $2,000,000. Sixteen miles of the Road are finished and in operation, 44 miles in addition fully graded, and a total length of 55 miles of track will be laid this season, while the whole Road, of about 150 miles, with the exception of 5 miles of easy work, is entered upon and contracted to be finished by responsible and wealthy parties within the ensuing year.

The Road will extend from the City of Oswego to Lewiston, on the Niagara River, with branches to Suspension Bridge and Buffalo, connecting at its Western terminus with the Great Western, the Canada Southern, and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroads, and at Oswego with the New-York Midland, and by way of the Midland with the proposed Boston, Rome and Oswego Railroad, which, when built, will thus provide a route from Chicago to Boston, 70 miles shorter than by any existing or contemplated line; connecting also at Oswego with the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad, and thence by the Vermont Central it completes connection with the entire railroad system of Northern New-England; while connections at Oswego with the Syracuse and Oswego Railroad, secures access to the coal fields of Pennsylvania.

With these connections a large through business is assured.
